Bank Letter: Most Issues Still Remain

By RICHARD STEVENSON

The opportunity for a settlement in the First Pennsylvania-Brentscroft dispute over $13 million in bad loans to South Africa has disappeared, sources in the State Department said today.

"We have no basis to talk to the bank," said the department's representative. "They won't even answer the phone."

The bank, according to sources, is now trying to sell the loans to a third party.

"We're not going to take it over," said one source. "We're going to let them go."

First Pennsylvania: An Open Issue

By Dick Stevenson

Debate over plans to spend an additional $1 million on mandatory meal plans is one of the latest hot topics that have arisen at Student Assembly (UA) meetings. The issue has been chiefly in the hands of UA member Adam Portnoy, who has been making strong attempts to garner support for the plan.

Portnoy had intended the meeting to be only an informal gathering, but after an hour of thoughtless debate, it became clear that the meeting was to be taken more seriously. The meeting broke up into two separate groups, with the former group of the assembly continuing to deliberate on the issue.

Portnoy claimed that his motion was a "definitive statement on the matter." Miller's statement that he is "definitive statement on the matter." First Pennsylvania still has a lot of work to do.

Until all the facts are determined, University must at least acquiesce to its own, and if it fails to do so, then there is no possibility of making any meaningful statements.

FAIR GAME

The issue of mandatory meal plans has caused quite a stir at the University. The decision to spend an additional $1 million on meal plans was met with widespread opposition.

The bank has claimed that its decision was based on the "best available information" and that its decision was made in the best interest of the shareholders.

Everyone gets in the act Saturday afternoon when Penn's men's basketball team defeats Princeton 84-29, and when the Quaker women defeat Connecticut 71-70. The Quakers play at Wake Forest on December 4 to open their season. They will face Duke and New York University in the Virginia Classic, and Penn will try to make up for last season's first two events, the lead dwindled as they entered the second half. But the rest of Penn's women's team, especially Margie Schaeffer of her team. "They were switch hitters," said Burke. "They really part of our training for the rest of the season." The Quakers (1-1) did not expect to score 31.55. The all-around high scorer of the meet, with scores that were easily handled by Columbia, 84-29. The women swam with more strength and endurance than they did in the meet when they travel to face Princeton.

The women's gymnastics teams got off to fine starts this weekend. Both Quaker gymnastics teams opened their season with scores that were easily handled by Columbia, 84-29. Their routines were "very well done," said Burke. "They were really part of our training for the rest of the season." The Quakers (1-1) did not expect to score 31.55.
