The cheapest of the quick passages from Philadelphia to Miami is the 20¢ round trip from Miami. Chicago is a much cheaper place to vacation. If one city had to epitomize all of the southern states, it would be Miami. Famous for its beaches, lights, and nightlife, Miami is the southern state that makes up the vacation dreams of beaches in America.

Miami, the swankiest stretch of beach in Florida's eastern coast make up the image that leads people to forget the historic villages, or isolated swamps, inland swampy areas. Florida, it would be Miami. Famous for its beaches, lights, and nightlife, Miami is the southern state that makes up the vacation dreams of beaches in America.

The Real Issues Facing the Undergraduate Assembly

By Doug Silver
A month ago I wrote a letter to the Daily Pennsylvanian expressing my belief that the University Dining Service, a Social Security and Medicare tax, was a gross mismanagement of University funds.

It may not come as too surprising to hear that the University Dining Service, a Social Security and Medicare tax, is grossly mismanaged. I may also be surprising to hear that it is even mentioned here, given the current state of America's economy.

FINANCE AID STRUGGLES TO MEET TUITION HIKE

In APHRODITE VALLERAS

The financial aid office's ability to meet the needs of students depends upon this year as expected

Wego's to the University's allocation,
Finance Director George Koval

1.20 which shows that approximately $8 million out of the $28 million in financial aid this year is obtained from outside sources
such as the state and federal government. Koval said that the amount of financial aid from these sources may not increase as much as University tuition and costs this year.

"Next year for the first time in four or five years there will be no new programs or increased assistance," he

The result, he added, is that the University's commitment to financial aid, which makes up all but approately $1.2 million in endowment funds will probably decide whether the University will be able to fund the aid program.

The University is hoping to forestall any problems with aid, however.
"I've been a policy to the past increase the amount of money (in the University budget) for financial aid by the percentage of increase in University gross revenue in the past years," Koval said. However, he added, that because our endowment is state guarranted aid programs will not be as great as in the past. So there is likely to be a smaller increase in financial aid this year than the percentage increase in tuition and costs.

"We can't really pinpoint when a decision will be made," he said.

But if the financial aid office is forced to do so, financial aid funds probably should be a dynamic change in the amount of financial aid available.

"My sense is that we probably make it happen," Koval said.

Development Drive Nears $230 Million

By ANDREW KREITMAN

The University's $230 million campaign, which began in 1978, by James F. Duderstadt and John M. Smith, is nearing completion. The drive, which is being handled by Trout & Daniel, was expected to raise $250 million by January.

Provost Vartan Gregorian last night warned a group of undergraduates that the recent "explosion" and "fragmentation" of knowledge make it necessary that universities find ways of integrating scholarly disciplines. Gregorian cautioned, as he has repeatedly in the past, against too much emphasis on professional training. "Success is not merely to be geared to money. Success is whether or not you determine that, given this great body of knowledge, you've done justice to yourself," he said.

Gregorian made these comments, which were based on his successful proposal for an Exxon Education Foundation, in an informal discussion before about 15 students in the Philomathean Society library in College Hall.

The Exxon Foundation granted the University $600,000 in October to aid in the integration of knowledge and the formation of interdisciplinary courses at the University.

Gregorian explained that such courses could include courses taught by several professors from different but related disciplines. For example, professors from history, political science, and economics could teach a course on the history of the Cold War, rather than have separate courses on recent U.S. history, diplomacy and American political science.

With the current fragmentation of knowledge, "there is no time to reflect. No one sees the total picture," Gregorian said.

Another problem of modern education, Gregorian said, is that people are not learning values. "Is there anything called value? If it's relativistic, then what is holding us together?" Gregorian asked.

Gregorian said that what is needed is a broader, integrated education, which would include humanities instruction. "I have been worried by having to teach ethics in a course on mathematics. One course is not going to teach moral integrity to you," he said.

Gregorian asserted that recent high inflation forces more students to rush through their education in order to graduate early and save money. He said that financial needs must be balanced with educational needs.

Gregorian, who talked with the students for more than an hour, told the students not to think they are completely educated at the end of their undergraduate training. "What the University has to teach you is how to learn. Learning is a lifetime job," he said.

"Modern education should teach you that knowing what you know is one half of knowledge. Knowing what you do not know is the other half," he added.
