Kappa Sigma Might Lose U. Recognition

BY ANDREW K. KEITMAN

University administrators have held off taking action against Kappa Sigma, a fraternity whose recent comments have raised concerns among the community. The fraternity has lost members as a result of these comments. However, the situation is still under review.

The fraternity's comments, which were found by the university administration to be racist, have caused concern. The fraternity's leadership has apologized, and efforts are being made to address the issue.

Sources said that the university's decision was based on the severity of the comments and the fraternity's response. It is unclear what further action the university may take.

The fraternity's leadership is working to address the situation and improve its standing with the university. They have reached out to the university administration to discuss the matter further.

Meanwhile, the university community remains divided on the issue. Some students and faculty members have spoken out in support of the fraternity, while others have called for stronger action.

The situation is ongoing, and the university will continue to monitor the fraternity's actions and make decisions as necessary.

I HA Blast Kills Three

The first report of a quiet day that ended for thousands of commuters the world over. B做什么 Price Reaches $800 Mark
NEW YORK-Gold prices soared past $800 an ounce for the first time ever yesterday as buyers surged to buy the precious metal, pushing the price past the $800 mark by the close of trading. The price of gold closed at $802.20 per ounce, up $9 from the previous day's settlement price of $793.20. The price of gold has been on a steady climb since the beginning of the year, with prices reaching new highs almost daily. The run-up in the precious metal's price is being attributed to a number of factors, including the continued uncertainty in the global economy, the weak dollar, and the anticipation of a further rise in interest rates. The recent increase in the demand for gold as a safe haven asset has also contributed to the rise in prices. The precious metal is often viewed as a hedge against inflation and political uncertainty, and the current climate of economic instability has led to a surge in demand for gold as a result. The strong performance of gold is expected to continue in the near future, with analysts predicting further gains in the coming months. The gold market is seeing a steady flow of new money as investors seek alternatives to traditional investments in the face of a turbulent market environment. The precious metal's price is expected to remain strong, with the potential for further gains in the near future.

The Pre-Med Tragedy

By Frederick Jones, III

The letters late last fall expressing concern over the Sullivan Principles have not yet been answered, and some students for medical school. The letters must be seen as a mandate for change and not as a rejection of the principles. The University currently holds about $24 million worth of stock in corporations that require South Africa-related corporations in which the University owns financial interests. The University is still in communication with many of these students, and thus might face divestment.

SULLIVAN PRINCIPLES

SULLIVAN PRINCIPLES: A Start, But the Situation May Soon Call for More

The Sullivan Principles are a start, but the situation may soon call for more. Africa and the world, it is likely to increase. The University, and those structural weaknesses that plague the Sullivan Principles. There are Pretoria government finds itself increasingly isolated in southern the position of the non-white South African significantly bettered by Sullivan Principles again. This means that University policy will reconsideration of the University's stance, and has opted to go with the proponents of divestment—say they fail to challenge the fact of apartheid, but are willing to be convinced that they are indeed working for a better South Africa. They say. have been merely cosmetic.

In addition, the principles directly affect very few South Africans—about one half of one percent of the population. Those who criticize the Sullivan Principles now point out that many black South African leaders call themselves capitalists. In the end, the University might be forced to divest from a number of other American companies operating in South Africa.

Supporters of the Sullivan Principles say they are an effective framework and mechanism for improving the plight of the non-white South African worker. They say that the Sullivan Principles are a way of bringing change to South Africa. The University currently holds about $24 million worth of stock in corporations that require South Africa-related corporations in which the University owns financial interests. The University is still in communication with many of these students, and thus might face divestment.

SOUTHERN AFRICA

The Trustees today are expected to agree on a policy for University ties to South Africa. Their decision will not be a surprise; the policy of the University will be, as it has been in the past, to require adherence to the Sullivan Principles or their equivalent. While we find it encouraging that the Trustees see fit to use the University's position and power to encourage returns in a country that has been abusive of human rights, the Sullivan Principles may not be enough to stop meaningful change.

The Sullivan Principles were written in 1977 by the Reverend Canon Sullivan, a Philadelphia minister and civil rights activist who also serves on the board of the United Nations. They have been endorsed by two of the world's largest corporations. The principles are designed to advocate racial integration and equity in the employment practices of American companies operating in South Africa.

However, the University might be forced to divest from a number of other American companies operating in South Africa. The University currently holds about $24 million worth of stock in corporations that require South Africa-related corporations in which the University owns financial interests. The University is still in communication with many of these students, and thus might face divestment.

A Big 5 Extravaganza at the Spectrum

BY DR. ELFRING

Harvard's women's fencing coach Rob Eglin and his players may not play in every Big 5 match and may not be at their best when they play them, but the success has been there. Both Harvard and Penn teams are ranked in the top five nationally, and both had a chance for three top-10 finishes yesterday. The Harvard Quakers were defeated by Temple, 14-9 in the Spectrum yesterday.

Pennsylvania has been one of the top teams in the nation, while Harvard was ranked 11th and 12th in various polls. The two teams were the only ones of any national ranking of 13 teams that were unbeaten. The Quakers share the top spot with New York, and the Harvard team is the only school without a loss in three years.

Both teams have played well in recent years, but they will have to be at their best to beat each other. Last year, Harvard and Penn played a four-game series in which both teams were unbeaten. This year, they meet early in the season to see who is the better of the two.

The women's fencing team is strong at the top and weak at the bottom, but they still have a chance to win. The men's team is stronger at the top and weaker at the bottom, but they still have a chance to win.

The game will be held at the Spectrum tomorrow afternoon, and is expected to be a thrilling match.

Quaker Oats

Although the PENN FOOTBALL TEAM finished last in the Ivy League last year, the team was able to make it to the NCAA tournament. This year, the team is looking to make it to the Big Ten tournament, which would be a huge step forward.

The team has made some changes this year, including the addition of a new quarterback. The team is hoping to build on last year's success and make it to the Big Ten tournament this year.

The team is also looking to improve its defense, which was a weakness last year. The team has brought in some new players and is hoping to improve on that front.

The team is looking to make it to the NCAA tournament this year and is working hard to achieve that goal.

Foilers: Men Anxious, Women Confident

BY ROBERTS

The Quaker men's and women's fencing squads have shared success under coach Dan Roberts for many years, and things are looking up for both teams. The women's team has a strong roster, including a national champion in the women's foil. The men's team has a balanced roster, with individual champions in both the men's foil and sabre.

The women's team is looking to build on last year's success and make it to the national championships. The men's team is looking to improve on last year's results and make it to the national championships as well.

The team is looking to make it to the national championships this year and is working hard to achieve that goal.

Classic, Delaware

BY JOHNATHAN

The DuPont Classic was held in Delaware this weekend, and it was a great success. The Classic is one of the biggest and most prestigious tournaments in the United States, and it is always a great place to see some of the best fencers in the country.

The Classic featured a group of competitors in the Philadelphia Track Club, the Quakers' home court, and with a strong showing against Delaware in all events, the Classic is expected to continue to grow.

The Classic is a great way to see some of the best fencers in the country, and it is always a great place to watch some exciting fencing matches.

A Grant to Delaware

BY ROBERTS

The Quaker men's and women's fencing teams have received a grant from the Delaware State Council on the Arts. The grant will be used to help the teams continue their success and build on it.

The grant will be used to help the teams continue their success and build on it. It will also be used to help the team continue to grow and become even better.

The grant is a huge boost for the team and is expected to help the team continue to grow and become even better.

Grapplers Still Juggling Wts.

The Quaker women's fencing team is still juggling weights, but they are determined to make it work. The team is working hard to be at their best for the upcoming matches.
