Trustee Committee Still Outlining \n\nBy JIM PIERCER

Though the University Trustees recently passed a University policy concerning in-\ntercollegiate athletics, the Committee on University \nResponsibility and \n
Students (CURS) has been \nevaluating the University's support of \nthese sports. The CURS has been preparing a report highlighting \nbest promoting racial equality in \n

Vance Offers Iran Aid Act

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance yesterday offered to work with both the United States and the Soviet Union to end the current Afghan conflict and would go to Moscow to discuss the possibility.

"We have no desire for a single solution, but we do not want to see more of the same kind of thing," Vance said.

Vance said that the United States could make a "significant" move to relieve the suffering in Afghanistan, which has been under Soviet occupation since 1979.

The Secretary of State would talk to the Soviets about the terms of such a move, which would involve aid to Afghanistan over a period of years.

Senate Urges Olympic Boycott

WASHINGTON — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted 94-4 yesterday to urge all American universities to boycott the 1980 Olympic Games in Moscow if the 12 nations that preceded the games is guaranteed.

The committee also urged the State Department to transfer the games to another site. The committee added the "U.S. must consider creating permanent homes for the Olympic Games."

"Mr. President," said the man who was calling on me, "I have been told that the State of the world is getting all right. Is there anything I can do to help you?"

Temple U. To Institute Program
To Broaden Freshman Curriculum

BY LINDA
Beginning next fall, Temple University will institute a program for freshmen which is aimed at providing liberal arts students with a broad cultural and mathematical training.

The program represents a change in the pattern of the 1960's and early 1970's when many colleges were de-emphasizing liberal arts courses to focus on math and science.

According to Temple's College of Liberal Arts, Assistant Dean George Doe, the elimination of required courses would have worked if high schools had not also begun to do away with many subject areas, forcing students with strong math or science skills to take more elective courses.

Dean Doe, however, that the program was a remedial course.

"A freshman student may not have heard of Milton and Cervantes, whereas they would have fifteen years ago," Doe said last Thursday.

The program represents a change in liberal arts requirements in favor of offering more elective courses. Doe denied, however, that the program was a remedial course.

"The emphasis will be on large sweeping overview of society and culture...not intended to be a two-semester survey of major works of literature, art, music, history, and philosophy," Doe said.

The program will be a two-semester course whose "primary role is to provide some basic principles of mathematics," in order to broaden the mathematical backgrounds provided by the high schools, and will involve basic mathematical skills by the end of the freshman year.

"The emphasis will be on large sweeping overview of society and culture, not intended to be a two-semester course," Doe added.

"The second part of the program will give the students freer choice of electives," Doe said.

If you ever go to the sub-varsity basketball half of the University gymnasium, take note. The handball court is the only feature of the place that isn't covered with ping-pong tables and South American students. There, you can see the Quakers' handball team playing. They usually start playing around 8:15 at night, unless someone has already taken the court that day.

The handball court is located in the left corner of the gymnasium, opposite the atrium. The Quakers' handball team consists of about 12 players, who usually play in doubles. They are divided into two teams: the A team and the B team. The A team is made up of the best players, while the B team is made up of the less experienced players. The Quakers' handball team is one of the few teams that play handball on a regular basis at the University.

The handball court is a small, rectangular room, with three walls covered in windows. The ceiling is made of wood, and the floor is covered in carpet. The walls are painted white, and there is a small desk in the corner of the room. The Quakers' handball team usually plays on a single court, which is located in the left corner of the gymnasium, opposite the atrium. The court is divided into two sections, each with a door. The A team plays on the left side of the court, and the B team plays on the right side.

The handball court is a popular place for students to hang out, and it's often filled with people playing ping-pong or just hanging out. The Quakers' handball team is a popular attraction, and they often have a large crowd watching them play.
