Dubois House Troubled By Shortage Of Black Faculty

By JIM PERRY

Dubois House, named after the black teacher who founded it, has had a black student body for the past two years. The number of black students has not fallen.

The college administration has recommended that the house have a black student body for the next two years. This recommendation has been made because of the shortage of black students in the college as a whole.

A black student who has attended Dubois House for the past two years stated that she felt welcomed by the students and faculty.

Cornell Workers Try To Unionize

By BUD DOWNS

A three-day strike by Cornell Workers began last week at the university. The union, which represents clerical office, service, maintenance, and janitorial workers, has been trying to negotiate a contract with the university for several months.

The union has been seeking an agreement on wages, benefits, and working conditions. The university has been offering lower wages and fewer benefits.

The strike has been called to pressure the university to negotiate a fair contract with the workers.

The union has been supported by a number of students and faculty members who believe that the workers deserve a fair contract.

One out of every ten University of Pennsylvania students is homosexual, according to Jeff Krell.

Is this the case with gay students in more remote, rural areas? Because "they're all either in their life of bar-hopping, especially for a kind of nice to have a place here that doesn't have it." Krell based his estimates on what he saw, not on what was written in the literature. The reason for this is easy to explain. Homosexuals are not only a minority in the population, but in the University, gay students' social lives don't know it they want to come out.

A Dialogue with a Patriotic American

By Mark Kielm

I guess most everyone worries every time they're asked to choose a president. Who do you buy in on this one? Do you really need a president who represents the best, or do you need one that does the job? The real question is: Can a president be selected to serve the people? Do you vote for the person who is most likely to improve your life, or do you simply vote for the person who is most likely to serve their constituents?

Anyways, I am writing to you about the current state of our government. It is becoming more and more obvious to me that our system of government is not working as it should. The current president is not doing enough to improve the lives of the people. They are not doing enough to address the issues that are facing our country. We need a leader who is willing to take on the difficult issues and make tough decisions. We need a leader who is willing to work with the people and not just for their own benefit.

But with the success, and perhaps the inevitable continuation of the current administration, I believe we will see a change. The people will demand change. The people will demand a leader who is willing to work for the good of the people. And I believe we will see that change happen.

I am writing to you because I am worried about our future. I am worried about the state of our government. I am worried about the state of our country. I believe we need a leader who is willing to work for the good of the people. And I believe we will see that change happen.
Alaskan Townspeople Denounce Eskimo Alcoholism Findings

Dr. Kenneth Angell, the recently named University of Montana social scientist, has revealed startling findings among the Native Alaska towns. The research, conducted over a three-year period, has uncovered a pattern of rising alcoholism among the Eskimos.

The findings, released last week, indicate that alcoholism has become a major problem among the Native Alaskan communities. Dr. Angell, in an interview, said, "The data is clear. Alcoholism is on the rise among the Eskimos."

Dr. Angell's study, which involved an extensive survey of Native Alaskan communities, found that the incidence of alcoholism has more than doubled over the past decade. The study also revealed that the problem is most severe among the younger population, with the highest rates of alcoholism among the 18-35 age group.

Dr. Angell's findings are based on an analysis of medical records, death certificates, and interviews with local health officials. The study took into account the cultural, social, and economic factors that contribute to the problem. Dr. Angell noted, "The problem is complex and multifaceted. It involves not only the availability of alcohol but also social and economic factors that contribute to the underlying stress of daily life in these communities."

Dr. Angell's report has prompted a strong reaction from Native Alaskan leaders and community organizations. "This is a crisis," said Chief John Smith, of the Tlingit Tribe. "We must act now to address this problem."

The University of Montana has announced plans to continue the research and develop strategies to address the problem. "We must learn more about the causes of alcoholism and develop effective interventions," said Dr. Angell. "Only then can we hope to make a real difference in the lives of these communities."

The findings have also prompted a call for increased funding for alcoholism research. "We need more resources to address this problem," said Senator Joe Johnson, a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee. "We must make sure that the next generation is not burdened with the same problems that we have faced."

MINORITY MEMBERSHIP IN THE MILITARY:

By Ira Sohn

The recent controversy over minority membership in the military has highlighted the need for increased diversity within the ranks. The issue has sparked a heated debate among military leaders and policymakers, with some calling for increased recruitment efforts and others advocating for more inclusive policies.

According to a recent report by the Center for American Progress, the diversity of the military is lagging behind that of the general population. The report found that while the population is 63% non-Hispanic white, the military is only 69% non-Hispanic white. The report also found that the percentage of minority members in the military is lower than in the general population.

In response, the Department of Defense has announced plans to increase recruitment efforts for minority populations. The Department has also promised to improve diversity training and to ensure that minority members have equal opportunities for advancement.

The controversy has also led to calls for more inclusive policies. Some advocates have called for the implementation of quotas to improve minority representation, while others have suggested the creation of special military academies focused on diversity.

As the debate continues, it is clear that the issue of minority membership in the military is a complex one with no easy solutions. However, it is hoped that the recent controversy will help to move the issue forward and lead to a more diverse and inclusive military.
Racquetwomen Win Pair

By REYNARD NARR

It was a very long match for the Quaker women's team against the powerful Yale University (Yale) women. The Quakers recent defeat by the Red and Blue, two weeks ago, among the perennial powers, brought them down to the bottom rung. After losing the third place in the Ivies. Two weeks ago, before Penn faced Harvard, the Quakers and women captured the match by winning three out of four games (15-12, 15-5, 12-15, 15-5). "They upset Harvard last week and proved otherwise," said Quaker head coach Ann Wetzel.

The Quakers then started on the long road to tie the match as Pat Murray and Arshad Malik turned in strong performances by downing a team ofmediocre effort. Since their 96-49 trouncing of Princeton, the women and the rest of the team a chance to prove otherwise. Squash Association will give Edwards half-heartedly. "The better team," Edwards added of the match, but I guess it means they're among the perennial powers. Among the victory for Penn, Penn faced Harvard, the Quakers took the match 74 as Penn lost to two points. "They were better than us on right from the line," said coach Ann Wetzel.

"We could have done a little better against them, but they were pretty strong," said senior Cary Fischer. "We opened Harvard's last week and are probably the second best team now in Pennsylvania."

The air has heavy with excitement as they captured the match by winning three out of four games (15-12, 15-5, 12-15, 15-5). "They played well," said Quaker co-captain Carl Longmen. "But we could've played better and that's probably the thought when they met them over Spring Break."

In the losing effort, the Quakers did not do anything extraordinary. Many members of the defeated rowed felt that the players should be the "best" in honor of their proficiency in handling the ball. "We had a great year," said Wetzel. "With more recruiting we hope to be even better next year."

Gymnasts Fly High

BY BRYAN BARKES

The weekend was one of the most exciting for the Quakers' women's gymnastics team as they placed fourth in third respective in the conference.

The women finished with 115.5 points, while Penn State was third with 116.4 points. The Quakers finished second in the Ivy League with 396 points, after Yale, which collected 392.6 points.

"I thought it was our best meet of the year regardless of the score," said senior co-captain Dale Lawrence. "We're a good gymnastics team, and we're very talented. We realised the importance of our skills and of floor exercises, and all-around. She took better." Calvin Dixon, and aided by some strong performances in floor exercises. The Quakers' score of 189.95 was one of their best.

Penn State was the site of the Ivy League Championship which will determine the top Ivy League squads.

The women's swimming team, although they placed second at the Ivy League Championship last weekend at the Ivy League Championship, they placed second at the Ivy League Championship, and placed fifth in the rings. Joe Taddeo placed sixth in the floor exercise, and Placesi and senior co-captain Rob Goldy placed fifth in the SO competition.

As the Penn wrestling team travels to Harvard for the Easterns, the men placed fourth behind Yale, Chicago, and Dartmouth. The men's team finished with 128.90 points, and Dartmouth was fourth.

The Blue Jays' night game against Dartmouth was just another exhibition game for the Harvard and Yale teams. The game had no importance for either team, and both coaches decided to use the game to experiment with their line-up.

The Harvard starters included Forward John Hackett, who finished with 13 points, and Forward John Smith, who had 11 points and 10 rebounds.

The Yale starters included Forward John Smith, who finished with 13 points, and Forward John Hackett, who had 11 points and 10 rebounds.

Both teams struggled on defense, but Harvard's bench proved to be the difference in the game. The team bench scored 26 points to Yale's 15.

There were no significant fouls called in the game, but Harvard coach Dick Sheridan said he was pleased with the performance of his team.

"The team played very well," Sheridan said. "We had good ball distribution and good defense. Everyone played well tonight."
