Annenberg Will Descend On Far East Fair

By LARRY WESTHEIMER

Sir James Annan, former British High Commissioner to Pakistan, who is now the chief executive of the United Nations, said yesterday that he is planning to descend on the 23rd Annual Fair of the University of Pennsylvania, which will be held on Saturday, April 2.

Mr. Annan, speaking at a luncheon at the Annenberg Center yesterday, said that he would like to see the University become more involved in the community and that he would be pleased to help it in any way he could.

He also said that he would like to see the University become more involved in the community and that he would be pleased to help it in any way he could.

Campus Events

In the Language and Literature Department, there is a revival of studying Italian at UPenn. The number of students interested in Italian has tripled, with 70 courses in various departments coming under the umbrella of Italian Studies. The department has organized an exchange program between the U.S. and Italy, and the students are now able to study Italian language and literature in the U.S.

This month, The Daily Pennsylvanian reported on the hostage crisis at the U.S. embassy in Iran. The crisis started on November 4, 1979, with the occupation of the U.S. embassy by militant Iranian students. The hostages included U.S. ambassador, Diego Asencio, and the estimated 30 guerillas who stormed the mission. The crisis lasted for 444 days, with the hostages not being released until January 20, 1981. The crisis had a significant impact on U.S.-Iranian relations and contributed to the rising tide of anti-American sentiment in Iran.

The campus community was also invited to a Casual Saturday event, which included a performance by Sigma Chi Fraternity. The event was held at Hillel, and included a costume party with a theme of "Mardi Gras." The event was held on March 1st, with the theme "Interfaith Unity Day Conference." This event was organized by the United Minority Council and was held in Memorial Hall. The conference was a meeting of minds, a forum for the exchange of ideas and a celebration of diversity. The event was attended by over 500 people, and was considered a success.

Other events included a concert of chamber music by the University Symphony Orchestra conducted by Eugene Narmour. The concert took place at Irvine Auditorium on March 9th.

The Goodman Theatre presented a production of Henrik Ibsen's "An Enemy of the People." The performance was directed by Paul Winfield and featured William Marshall. The play was a critical success, and received positive reviews from the local media. The production was held at Wallace Village for Children on March 7th.

International Relations Undergraduate Council and the Center of Internship Connections sponsored a trip to Israel, which included a visit to the Association of Jewish Students. The trip was held on March 8th, and was an opportunity for students to learn about Jewish culture and history.

Overall, the month of March was filled with a variety of events and activities. From concerts and performances to cultural events and romantic getaways, there was something for everyone on campus. The campus community was active and engaged, and the events were well-attended. The campus was a vibrant and dynamic place, with a lot going on at all times.

An Invitation to Sen. Moynihan

President Moynihan announced recently in so many words that he thought it would be an advantage to all American politics if the Senator would make it a University-wide and not a celebration.

Universities should be forums for the exchange of ideas. The invitation is not a statement on the position of the Senator or the student who sponsored the idea. It is an attempt to establish an atmosphere of mutual understanding. Opposing viewpoints need not be reconciled, but they should be understood. We wish to express our support of the position of the other.

We at the University have spent the last few days trying to encourage freedom of thought and expression. In part, this can be accomplished by conversations with others, and especially with those we disagree with. We hope Senator Moynihan will accept our invitation, and that if he does, the University community will fully cooperate to make such conversations possible.

In this way we can further the mission of the University and not alienate the freedoms upon which this country is built.

An Unfortunate Alternative

There seems to be some strong logic behind the decision of this year's candidates to leave Philadelphia out of the Student Spring Fling, which was held last Saturday morning for the snow and below-zero conditions.

There are several good arguments in favor of this move. Perhaps more important than any other reason is the belief that Spring Fling is in some way associated with the undercurrent of passive observers. The volunteers could make a fool out of the entire University. The夸要在 many ways, sum up their strategy and experiences and have always been subjected to heavy criticism and ridicule from those who oppose them. We are left with a major portion of Spring Fling, the University's most exciting event of the year.

We can still enjoy the fun of the year, as there is no better atmosphere for debate. Hopefully, the changes made will lead to a more enjoyable event for all.

Tramping Through New Hampshire

By Kevin B. Sidel

Rolling down 495 out of Manchester, New Hampshire, we left behind a Democrat who doesn't support Ted Kennedy. He left us, because Ted Kennedy is a Democrat and, therefore, a second-rate candidate.

No Calles Mas

Twenty-one people, including ten University undergraduate volunteers, arrived at the New Hampshire Democratic Headquarters last Saturday morning for the snow and below-zero conditions.

The main reason for the trip was to thank the volunteers who had already helped the Kennedy campaign. The second reason was to solicit donations for the campaign. The third reason was to gain experience from the entire campaign.

For three days in Manchester, New Hampshire, the volunteers were in charge of running the phones. They placed phone calls to径申inal voters, surveyed the public's opinion and offered them the opportunity to talk to a volunteer and learn about the candidate.

Finally, the volunteers helped to develop a message for the campaign and to gain additional experience with political campaigns.

The volunteers gained valuable experience, and they stated that their time on the phones was an eye-opening experience. They would like to see the University offer more opportunities to gain similar experience.

The University is currently planning an on-campus campaign for the upcoming election. The students have been encouraged to participate in this effort.

A Matter of Honor

The Daily Pennsylvanian's Code of Academic Integrity, Section A, Article 1, Line 6, subsection 7, states: "The University welcomes students who are not members of the administration, if such students are granted permission to be in the Code..." This means that the University is concerned with the academic process and has always been uniquely American.

The Code of Academic Integrity must be maintained in order to ensure the academic process is so conducted that all students do not make meaningful contributions to the University or to society. The University is concerned with the academic process and has always been uniquely American.

Matmen Expect Little at EIAs

By RICHIE UNTERBERGER

After closing on the season with a disappointing 13th place, the Penn wrestling team will not have a chance to pull off any upsets against some of the finest teams in the country when the Ivy League hosts the 19th annual Eastern Invitational Athletic Wrestling Invitational (EIAs) this weekend in New York City.

Located on the edge of the Manhattan campus, the EIAs is an annual invitational tournament held each spring since 1929, featuring the top college wrestling teams from the northeastern United States.

Although Penn's wrestling program has seen some success in recent years, finishing in the Top 20 in each of the last three seasons, the Quakers have yet to make an impact at the EIAs. The closest the Quakers have come to qualifying for the EIAs was in 1990, when they finished 12th.

Penn will be among the 21 teams competing for a spot in the EIAs, which is held in the same city as the NCAA championship. The EIAs is considered one of the top college wrestling tournaments in the country and is a great opportunity for Penn to prove its worth.

The competition will be fierce, with teams such as Cornell, Columbia, Harvard, and Princeton all vying for a spot. However, Penn will face a tough battle to make it to the EIAs, as they are currently ranked 13th in the nation, just below the cut-off mark for the EIAs.

If the Quakers want to make it to the EIAs, they will need to perform well in their home meet against Columbia, which they will face on Saturday. A strong showing against the Big Red could earn them a spot in the EIAs, and they will have to be at their best to compete with the top teams.

Despite the challenge, the Quakers are confident in their ability to compete at the EIAs. "We're excited to compete against some of the best teams in the country," said Penn's head coach, John Kenney. "We know it will be a tough battle, but we're ready to prove ourselves.

If Penn can perform well against Columbia, they may have a chance to make it to the EIAs, but it won't be easy. The Quakers will need to bring their A-game if they want to compete with the top teams and earn a spot in the EIAs.

You might as well call this weekend the Ivy League Championships. The Pride of Philadelphia, Penn, has dominated the Ivy League Squash Championships in recent years. For the second straight year, the Quakers will flow out of the Palestra the winners of the Ivy League Championships.

Princeton's Andy Saltzman was his match-up against Harvard'stop-seededTobias Hofstetter. With Hofstetter being the third seed, he found himself in the quarterfinals.
