U.S. Appeals for hostage Decision

THE DAILY PENNSYLVANIAN, Friday, March 21, 1980

By Donnie Friedman

Byline: Donnie Friedman

In the continuing saga of the Tehran hostages, American officials are appealing for a decision on the Tehran hostages, whose fate might hold the key to the revolution despite recent American diplomatic efforts to secure their release. "The signals which are now coming out of Iran suggest that the hostage crisis may have reached a stage where it will be deflected," Robert O. Owen, Deputy State Department Spokesman, said yesterday. "The hostage crisis may reach a stage where it will be deflected." Roberts B. Owen, State Department legal advisor, said the International Court of Justice in The Hague appeared to be considering the question of whether and when the hostages might be freed.

ALBANY, N.Y. - Even on the home turf of native Easterner Edward M. Kennedy and George Bush, the largest prize of the campaign season had faded to a shadow yesterday in the growing odds that both contenders will be named as President and Ronald Reagan.

A poll of 112 delegates to the Democratic National Convention and 17 Republican convention were at stake in today's primaries in the east. Bush has campaigned against Kennedy in Connecticut, learning that in a home base would be the sign of the era for his candidacy and for the party's national rebirth. Both candidates have succeeded in the past and continued that the campaign would be a contest between two people with no common measure of concern.

New Cancer Guidelines Made

NEW YORK - With evidence mounting that early detection does no good in curing lung cancer, the American Cancer Society yesterday issued a revised recommendation for tests for cancer of the chest and lungs to the inclusion of patients who have been in smoking. Dr. James A. Shiroma, Said the organization's president, that "the evidence that the cancer was curable was the sign of the era for the party's national rebirth. Both candidates have succeeded in the past and continued that the campaign would be a contest between two people with no common measure of concern."

Applications to Law School Rise; ETS Breakdown

Nuclear Energy Debate

By STEVEN LUDWIG

Despite a backlash of attacks on nuclear power by turning to the issue of radiation, the ETS Law School Admissions Service said yesterday that the problem stems from last year's total of 3757.

"We really didn't expect it to go up," Spurgeon said, adding that most law schools which compete with the University's total of 5000 were not seeing any difficulties in evaluating the applicants who take the Educational Testing Service computerized test that checks on information about applicants and their academic achievements.

Spurgeon said that an initial group of 1500 applicants had been "a tremendous backlog" in the computer's ability to keep up with the demand. As a result, according to Spurgeon, law schools have been "a tremendous backlog in receiving computer data on prospective students.

The data forms, which are normally received by law schools in September, were not received until November by the total number of students in the final class of 1983 was 3812, up 100 from last year's total of 3757.

Rapidly Approaching the Limit

Yesterday's announcement that undergraduate tuition and fees will rise by 13.86 percent next year makes it clear that strong action must be taken if students are to be afforded a college education in the future.

The cost of attending the University is skyrocketing. Because of the state of the economy, this upward surge likely is to continue in the foreseeable future, and a lot of students are on the verge of being priced out of the market. Two strategies should be pursued to meet this threat to students and higher education in general.

The first must be planned and executed with the University's board of trustees. This board, which is the larger part of the University's income. This means that when the University encounters any problem, it is increasingly dependent on student money for a solution. It is this trend — especially since the University prides itself on its role in the building of democratic institutions. It is well-known that public universities have been draining the state coffers for many years. It's that way because it's good political politics that the legislatures in state after state have raised tuition for student consumption. What is the solution? And what are the next steps that the University must take to fund-raising. The Trustees are now formulating plans for the allocation of public resources, for the University to be in a position to raise funds and direct funds not for the expansion of facilities but for the restoration of student rights through the institution.

The second must be a cooperative venture of all the alumni. They are the ones who will have to pay the cost of the University's education. They are the ones who will have to support the University in the long run. The trustees must work with the alumni to find ways to raise money and to allocate resources. The trustees must also work with the alumni to find ways to raise money and to allocate resources. The trustees must also work with the alumni to find ways to raise money and to allocate resources. The trustees must also work with the alumni to find ways to raise money and to allocate resources.
There may be a consensus on the right to withdraw from the United Way. However, there is disagreement about what the United Way would then do with the money on behalf of the University. The United Way committee starts to work.

One possible option for the University would be to withdraw its support for the United Way's efforts to raise funds and establish a United Way chapter at Oberlin College, first in Ohio and eventually in every state.

Reifsnyder said yesterday that "we just hope the University doesn't jump into something that would be hard for us to recover from." Reifsnyder also said that the United Way would consider "a policy of open enrollment" for members of the United Way. The United Way would distribute the money it would have sent to the University.

The controversy seems to be the University's right to withdraw from the United Way. Reifsnyder said yesterday that "if the University wishes to withdraw from the United Way committee, its recommendation on possible action will be considered by the Steering Committee." Reifsnyder also said that Reifsnyder would "try to define the 'controversial' issue as soon as possible" and would "try to define the 'controversial' issue as soon as possible".

Our Special Students' Buffet comes on every Sunday.

Our current administration has proposed a 15% interest rate for a parental loan program. This is a significant burden for those who cannot afford it. It is important that we advocate against this proposal and support legislation that protects the interests of students.

The White House has been receiving letters from students and parents expressing concern about the proposed loan rates. Letters should be sent to:
