Followup RacismForum Is Scheduled For Tonight

By JIM PERRY
Due largely to the success of its first meeting, the Racism Forum of the University College will stage a follow-up discussion of current affairs and try to explain its meaning and understanding of these issues.

Dean Peter J. F. Connolly, College's acting dean, this morning said that the forum "will continue to be very positive," Glenside said. "We're hoping to have more follow-up discussions and are working on a continually schedule inviting other characters.

All panelists who attended the first meeting have been invited to return to the forum, and some will do so when the forum is scheduled for the University community.

Though last week's forum was turned over as an overall success, several panelists were disappointed with the discussion's format and format.

"We're still fairly in the dark about what the forum is all about," said Low Res. 7 North resident Adam Kuchnir, one of the 14 students present. "There were too many people involved.

Both of the panelists and their listeners, who numbered a hundred or so, "are confused about what is going on," said Low Res. 7 North resident Chuck Magnani, the group's president.

"It's very hard for us to get parts of the picture and to make a "initial judgment," said Magnani. (Continued on page 2)

Library Shifts Materials To Ease Space Shortage

By MARTHA LEVINE
The University is in the process of switching a shortage of space for its library materials to other University awarded materials to other libraries awarded.

To accommodate the space need, for the first time in the history of the University, a special "space" has been reserved in the library for use by other libraries.

The second element, a master's degree, and $9.10 for those students who would like to place a master's degree, and $9.10 for those students who would like to place rentals will not. University rentals will not be relocated to the University-owned bookstores.

The decision to move the rental books was made by Provost Vartan Gregorian. The provost said that he would like to have the rental books moved to the University-owned bookstores.

The students have expressed their wishes to refrain from using goods manufactured by that firm.

"The process of measuring and storing caps and gowns was delayed because there was a shortage of materials," said President Martin Meyerson and Provost Gregorian explained. "We are not required to own caps and gowns, but we purchase them from manufacturers.

The estimate has added $1,224.00 to each student's bill.

Maneuvers, Maps, and Mindfields: A Weekend Mission for ROTC

In an attempt to fulfill the assignment given by Dr. Alphonse H. Althaus, Provost of the University, the members of the University ROTC students were given a "thought and war" mission for the weekend of the week.

In the mission, each of the students was given a specific mission and a specific course of action to take in order to fulfill the mission.

The course of the mission was based on the stripes on the map of the area, and the students were given a "thought and war" mission for the weekend.

The students were to map the course of the mission, and then to follow the course of the mission in order to fulfill the mission.

The weekend retreat, which was to be held outdoors, was to be a "thought and war" mission for the weekend.

"It's scary when you think that people do get hurt in wartime situations, especially if you're unprepared," Holloman added. Although she was one of the few women patrol leaders on the retreat, she claimed that she felt she handled the patrols correctly.

"I enjoyed it," Holloman said. "But sometimes you feel strange. You wonder what people think about you and whether you're incapable of leading." Girls have it harder when it comes to leading combats, Holloman added. "They're not brought up to think that way," she felt. "They're not brought up to think that way and don't think in terms of combat or strategy."

Although the weekend was cut short because of rain, most of the students had been exposed to the rigors of army training - but not too much.

"When you think people go to war in snow and rain and they don't call off war," Holloman said, "it makes you appreciate how lucky you are that it isn't for real."
The Boston U. Connection

By Richard E. Gordon

A New England football newspaper recently had a meeting with a prominent basketball player who has been named a candidate for the presidency of Stanford University.

The reason in B.U.'s controversial presidential search is the committee's decision to continue with the search. The committee has been accused of being biased and unprofessional.

In the black suits and white ties have been hired to work in the private sector. They are bank presidents from major banks.

The Boston U. trustees did not see it that way. The group gave Silber unanimous voice of support. They made the decision to support the administration.

The reason the faculty voted to fire Silber was that the faculty was upset with the way the administration handled the situation. They felt that the administration was not being transparent and was not communicating effectively with the faculty.

But the B.U. trustees didn't see it that way. The group gave Silber unanimous voice of support. They made the decision to support the administration.

The Black students were angry. They felt that the university was not doing enough to address the issues they were facing.

The nude has not always been the focus of Young's work. For many years she photographed only the evidence of people-lowered dolls, abandoned vehicles. "A lot of people loved this work," she said, "but a lot didn't. It astonished. There were some who thought I didn't have to do it. I had to do it with how I saw the work coming. My philosophy is that you have to move forward. It's a whole growing process. You can really see it in pictures you've made in the past. Things being able to understand more about yourself by adding problems through your work is one of the greatest reasons to be an artist."

"When I was young I though that work was for rewards. But professionals now have a system of rewards, and it's wonderful, but it does not guarantee happiness." At the end of her teaching day, Young said she plans to find other subjects for her work besides nudes. "I think work has to be about women," she said, "the way a nude is photographed, how you can photograph a woman." Young thought they were beautiful, and how they reflected, you think of yourself."

"The nude has not always been the
