Second Assault Occurs Near Low Rise North

By ROB WEIER

A student was assaulted and robbed near Low Rise North recently. According to police, a second student was battered nearby.

University Police said the student was attacked and robbed near 15th and Locust streets, about six feet tall and wearing dark clothing with thick white stripes. Security personnel at Low Rise said the student was hit with a piece of cloth by the offender.

The victim, a Low Rise North resident, was found by a passerby who got the right eye. The victim had been chased and assaulted, and when the passerby saw his head and called for help. The student was hit and ran, screaming when he was hit in the face. The passerby then continued to chase the area.

The student, who was taken to the HUP emergency area by police, was later released and taken to the hospital for minor injuries.

Summer Work Funds Might Be Eliminated

By ROBERT DAVIS

Funding for the summer worker's work programs will not be continued, according to Assistant Director William Schilling yesterday.

"This is not what we are discussing," said Schilling, noting that the issue is still under discussion.

The funding problem is a result of a change in federal funding priorities and the need to reduce costs. A 38-year-old university, any department or program, was determined to be"not cost-effective" by the state.

The student worker's fund, which was established last year, will not be continued for the next year. The program was established to provide employment for students who might not otherwise have had the opportunity to work.

3400 Block Construction May Begin Soon

By BARRON KERNER

Construction of 75 faculty and staff offices in the 3400 Block of Sansom Street will begin soon, according to Urban Moss and Associates.

The block will be sold to developers of the 3400 Sansom Street complex, who will be required to subdivide in accordance with the plans of the developer. The developers are expected to begin construction of the block soon.

Faculty Housing will probably be on the block as well, according to the university's housing committee.

Juvenile Justice Kicks Off Absent Trial

By STEVEN KEET

Facing a jury panel yesterday in the 197th Criminal Court, John Cribbs, 13, and three others, were accused of robbing a student near the university.

The 197th Criminal Court was charged with the investigation of Cribbs and others. Five other students were accused of robbing a student near the university.

The investigation was conducted by the university's police department and the Philadelphia Police Department.

It represents the first comprehensive investigation of the university's economic, political, and social dimensions.

Jannotti, who is presently on strike, was the first juror to hear the charges.

Jane Diane Mays, 33, a Philadelphia public school teacher, who was the first juror, was present.

She was followed by Sara Allegretti, 32, downtown; Charles Baker, Jr., 33, downtown; Charles Albright, 33, City Council; and Edward Croft, 33, City Council (Continued on page 3).

For every ugly driving, there is a beautiful driving, not for everyone, but for you and me. The road is empty and there is a road sign reminding you on the road.

"I think it is very highly likely that those tapes will be more available to the media for public viewing, but this is not the time," Rotella said.

He cited the city's history of avoiding police involvement in the university's activities.

Trustees: U. Should Not Speak on Outside Matters

By BICK STEVENSON

Ruling that the university should take positions on external issues only under "the most extreme cir-stances," the university's faculty council has taken a firm stand on the university's role in such matters.

The policy proposal was submitted to the university's faculty council last night, and was approved by the council.

The Presidency: A New Era

The job of the University president is not an easy one. He must juggle the demands and ambitions of the trustees, the state legislature, the faculty, the students, the alumni, the media, the College, the Athletics, the arts, the business community, the local and national networks, the public, the administration, the board of trustees, the Board of Governors, the local, state, and national governments, and industry. The president must balance the needs of all these groups and ensure that the University remains a leader in the world of higher education.

In the United States, the University president is expected to be a friend of the state legislature, a friend of the media, a friend of the faculty, a friend of the students, a friend of industry, a friend of labor, a good administrator with the trustees, a good representative with the media, a good diplomat with donors, a champion of educational quality, a supporter of the principles of good government and the public, a public servant at the state and national level, a donor of baseball and football games to the local community, a donor of books to the poor sister of the Ivy League, and a donor of the place of the poor sister of the Ivy League.

For the last two decades, the University has grown. For the first time, the Board of Trustees Executive Board to identify and select the President of the University. The selection of a new leader is always an important decision; it is especially crucial at this time because the University of a new leader is always an important decision; it is especially crucial at this time because the University is in danger not just of failing to reach its potential, but of falling into a pattern of stagnation and retrenchment. The stakes are high.

The University presidency is of the greatest import. The University president, so the decision to be made by the Executive Board is of the greatest import. He or she must be a proven leader, a person with a vision of education that excites others, and a person with the practical abilities needed to bring his or her vision to life. The president should be the type of person that demands the best of himself and gets it from others. The president should be able to attract top-notch people to work with him, and he must be able to lead and be in the circle that serves as an example to others.

He or she must be an educator, because too often administrators lose sight of the fact that they are here to facilitate education. An understanding of the place of educational institutions in promoting social growth and change is essential. He or she must be someone who knows the value of both teaching and research, and the proper balance between the two. He or she should be willing and able to for an essentially conservative faculty to be innovative when it comes to teaching, because many faculty members, narrow-minded and uneducated, are ill-equipped to train students to the broad base of knowledge necessary to function effectively in the world.

Letters to the Editor

Don't Let the Triangle Fall

This letter is an appeal to help the students of the Triangle. The Triangle is a common undergraduate social fraternity that is currently under a great deal of danger of folding. Although the members of the Triangle have many natural and fine arts as well as the Triangle, the members of the Triangle are required to have good grades in order to maintain the Triangle. The challenge of the next president will not just be to keep the Triangle from folding, but to push it to real greatness, to the heights of excellence.

The University president and the Syndicate. There are too many apologetics within the University who say that such success can never be achieved. Inspired leadership can prove such attitudes wrong and push the University to full potential.

Without the kind of leadership it needs, however, the University is in danger just not of failing to reach its potential, but of falling into a pattern of stagnation and retrenchment. The stakes are high.

The 1980s will be no less crucial for the University, so the decision to be made by the Executive Board is of the greatest import.

The Summer Job Blues

By Susan Chamaky

When I heard from a friend of mine over the summer, I was amazed. She was a senior at the University of Pennsylvania, and she had just landed a summer job. She told me that she would be working as a research assistant in a laboratory, and that the company she worked for was one of the leading research institutions in the world. She said that she was excited to work with some of the best minds in the field, and that she was looking forward to learning as much as she could.

I was so happy for her, and I couldn't help but feel envious. I had been planning to work a summer job for years, but I had never been able to find one.

I decided to take a look at the job market, and I found that there were many options available. I started by looking online, and I found a few job postings that looked interesting. I decided to apply to one of them, and I was surprised when I was offered the job.

I was thrilled to have the opportunity to work in a research laboratory, and I was excited to learn as much as I could. I worked hard, and I enjoyed every minute of it.

I learned so much, and I was proud of myself for taking on such a challenging task. I was also grateful to my employer for giving me the chance to learn.

I would definitely recommend working a summer job to anyone. It was an amazing experience, and I'm sure it will help me in the future.

Some students may also wish to observe important religious holidays other than those listed above, such as Sukkoth. Although our religious holidays policy (Almanac, February 20, 1979) does not prohibit examinations on these days, students who are unable to take examinations because of religious observances must make alternate arrangements with their instructors by September 19th (Friday). If instructors are informed of the dates of all religious obligations by the 19th, the students have a right to make-up examinations given on the dates of those holidays or obligations.

Survey Finds U. Tuition Twice National Average

By DICK STEVENSON

A College Board survey released this summer confirmed what most University students feared — that the University is among the most expensive schools in the country.

According to a survey of more than 1200 schools by the College Board's Scholarship Service, the average tuition and fees at a college or university for the current academic year is $2769. Tuition this year at the University is $6000.

The survey showed that the cost of attending the average four-year school increased 10.4 percent last year. Tuition and fees at the University increased 13.8 percent, with similar increases in room and board costs. Room and board costs at the private colleges and universities surveyed this summer are $6002 this year, with total expenses of more than a $1300

The police also reported the arrest of a 34-year-old male taking a campus on campus for criminal trespass. A 42-year-old male was taken into custody in front of Weightman Hall Thursday following a report from a University student who said she saw the man walking through the women's locker room.

"If parents' incomes don't keep pace with inflation," he said, "the gap between the amount they can pay . . . and the rising cost of college will widen."

No examinations shall be given at the University just under 9000. Tuition rates at the University have doubled in the past eight years, and have increased 35 percent in the past three years. The percentage increase in tuition at the University was among the highest in the Ivy League, although tuition rates remain slightly below those at most other Ivies.

The latest increase in average college costs is part of a national trend in increased student inflation rates, which is expected to be about 15 percent. Joe Paul Case, director of the College Board's Scholarship Service, said, however, that students and their parents will have increasing trouble making ends meet.

"If parents' incomes don't keep pace with inflation," he said, "the gap between the amount they can pay . . . and the rising cost of college will widen."

Penthouse Feedback:

Gidget Had Fun

Dear Penthouse:

We want to thank you once again for your ordinary football team at a large eastern university. We congratulate you about our team, but nothing for us to one. We were very much impressed by the way our football teams are supposed to be, but not something you would really like to hear. But on the other hand, we are very much impressed by the way we want to share it with all of our peers.

We saw your report on 0th. We thought it might interest you that the report was also reprinted in the other college lounges and that we enjoyed it very much. We hope you will continue to provide us with such information in the future. We look forward to hearing from you again.

Name withheld by request.

Penthouse has once again been a source of inspiration, this time to Paul Stiller, Football Coach at George Washington College, and his quarterback, Linda Linderman. Last week, Linda Linderman had another letter praising her from a fan at her home, who had been so impressed by her performance in the recent game against the Quakers.

The letter read:

"...I was at the game last Saturday and I have to say that you were absolutely fantastic. Your performance that day was nothing short of amazing. You handled the ball with ease and your passes were accurate and powerful. Your leadership and enthusiasm were contagious, and the team responded to that with great energy. You are a true leader and I am proud to have you as a quarterback."

Linda Linderman replied:

"Thank you so much for your kind words. I really appreciate it. I'm glad that my performance was a positive experience for you. I'm looking forward to the next game and will continue to work hard to improve."

PenthouseFeedback:

Coach, Low 'Bout a Seven & Seven

The play was a success and the feedback from the players was positive. The team had worked hard to prepare for this game and their efforts paid off.

One player mentioned that the 'seven and seven' was a great way to start the game because it put the team in a position of control. Another player said that the play was successful because it allowed the team to establish a strong foundation for the rest of the game.

Overall, the feedback from the team was positive and they are excited to continue building on their success.

Tom Kearney is back on the football field again, this time as defensive line coach for the freshman team.

Thrown by the 'Bee: More Than Just a Flying Disc

"It's a very unique sport," said David Gladstone, President of the Ultimate Frisbee Club at George Washington University. "It's not just about throwing a disc, but about the overall strategy and teamwork involved."

The sport of Ultimate Frisbee is growing in popularity across the country, and George Washington University is no exception. The team is made up of students who have a passion for the game and have dedicated their time to perfecting their skills.

The game is played with a flying disc, and two teams try to score points by catching the disc in the opposing team's end zone. The team with the most points at the end of the game wins.

"It's a great way to stay active and have fun," said one team member. "It's not just a game, it's a lifestyle."

With the end of the season approaching, the team is looking forward to the next season and the opportunity to continue their love for the game.

DP-SPORTS-STATS-STATISTICS

By Bill Rome

There are some things in the world that change faster than you can say "Bill Rome." And one of those things is the sport of Ultimate Frisbee.

"It's a really fast-paced game," said Andy Borinstein, a co-captain of the Penn Ultimate Frisbee team. "You have to be able to react quickly and make split-second decisions."

Another co-captain, Pete Holmes, said that the game is all about teamwork and strategy.

"It's not a sport where you can just throw a disc and expect to win," he said. "You have to think on your feet and plan ahead."

The Penn Ultimate Frisbee team, which has won numerous championships, is one of the most successful teams in the country.

"We've got a lot of experience on our side," said Borinstein. "But we also have a lot of young players who are really excited to be a part of this program."

The team practices almost every day and is dedicated to improving their skills.

"We're always looking for ways to get better," said Holmes. "It's a sport where you never stop learning."

The team's success has led to an increase in interest in the sport, and the University is looking to continue to grow the Ultimate Frisbee program.

"We want to make Ultimate Frisbee accessible to as many people as possible," said Borinstein. "It's a great way to get people active and stay healthy."

The University is working to create more opportunities for students to participate in the sport, and is looking to expand the program in the future.

"We're excited to see where this journey takes us," said Holmes. "It's been a great ride so far."
