Duffield Named Director of Publications Division

By VICTORIA RUTH HILL

New University Publications manager Ann Duffield has been named to head the University's publications office.

Duffield comes in the office at a time when it has been plagued with management problems and dissatisfaction among many of the students. To help solve both these problems, Duffield has a number of suggestions that he would like to see implemented.

Ann Duffield, who heads the University's publications office, recommends that all students interested in working for the publications office should read the following message carefully.

"I have been asked to write this message to students interested in working for the publications office. My name is Ann Duffield, and I am the new manager of the publications office. I would like to welcome you to the publications office, and I hope that you will consider working for us.

"Before I begin, I would like to tell you a little about the publications office. We are responsible for producing a number of documents for the University, including the Daily Pennsylvanian, the Daily Princetonian, and the Daily Student. We also produce a number of other publications, such as the University Calendar and the University Bulletin.

"The publications office is a large place, and it is not easy to find the information you need. However, I hope that you will find the information you need in this message.

"First, I would like to tell you about the publications office's work on the Daily Pennsylvanian. The Daily Pennsylvanian is a daily newspaper that is produced by the students of the University. It is published in the morning, and it is distributed to the students on the campus.

"The Daily Pennsylvanian is a very interesting newspaper. It covers a wide range of topics, from local news to national news. It is written by students, and it is edited by students. It is a very important part of the University's community, and it is a very important part of the University's life.

"I would like to tell you about the publications office's work on the Daily Princetonian. The Daily Princetonian is a daily newspaper that is produced by the students of the University. It is published in the morning, and it is distributed to the students on the campus.

Iraq, Iran Trade Bombings

BASRA, Iraq - Iraqi warplanes bombed Tehran yesterday as set fire to oil storage tanks in the Iranian capital. The bombers, which were based at Baghdad, Iraq's military command reported.

At the headquarters of the Persian Gulf, Iraq and its ground forces forced a siege ring around the burning oil refinery city of Ahwaz, but Iraq claimed it pushed the Iranians from the city completely.

In a communique broadcast by Baghdad Radio, the Iraqi military command and all reports in Tehran were fine after a net rainfall and that Iraq MGs had bombed an airport near Iran's western city of Khorramshahr, 25 miles southwest of Tehran. The announcement said Iraqi forces had cut raid oil pipeline to Abadan and captured the pipeline, and this southern city per cent on the Shatt al-Arab waterway.

Reporters who joined the Iraq forces near Ahwaz were taken to positions about a mile north of the oil refinery and said that because Persian jet bombsIraq forces appeared to be striking ready for the battle and had fired all missles and expelled burning oil. But the Iraq forces seemed to be adopting a strategy of siege and air attacks. The city was surrounded and the oil port city of Khorramshahr 10 miles to the north and use artillery to slow the two cities.

Afghan President Visits Moscow

MOSCOW- President Babrak Karmal of Afghanistan held face-to-face talks yesterday with his brother at the Kremlin for the first time since the Soviet military landed in Kabul 12 months ago.

Karmal, also the leader of the ruling People's Democratic Party, and President Leonid Brezhnev both agreed that a study of Afghan conditions, to pave the way for a new government in Kabul, has been successful. The talks also discussed the importance of the visit, claims of "successful operations for the liquidation of gangs of mercenaries and terrorists" in Afghanistan and accounts of the "harsh and suffocating" environment Afghan journalists have suffered the Soviet Union.

Reagan elected

Reagan will be reelected President of the United States later this month. Two years ago the nation held its breath before the election. The same will be true now. But the contest between the two candidates is about as far removed from the intense, critical campaign of 1980 as the year from the Reagan administration to the upcoming elections. It is a contest about the coming years of the decade, not just the last four years. But the contest is also about the President's policies, and the nature of the American political system.

In foreign policy, Reagan's regimes continue to be characterized by a balance of power strategy. While this strategy has been somewhat successful in recent years, it has also been criticized by some as too passive. The President's policies are likely to remain consistent with those of his predecessors. There is little doubt that the United States will continue to support its allies in Europe, and that it will remain committed to NATO. However, some observers have raised questions about the wisdom of continuing to support the Soviet Union.

In domestic policy, the administration is likely to continue its focus on economic growth and job creation. The emphasis on supply-side economics and tax cuts is likely to persist. Some observers, however, have raised concerns about the long-term sustainability of this approach.

The impact of Reagan's policies on American society is likely to be significant. The deregulation of industries such as telecommunications and utilities has been a key component of his administration's strategy. These changes have led to increased competition and lower prices for consumers. However, they have also resulted in job losses and increased inequality.

The administration has taken a hard line against communism, and has been accused of using military force as a strategy. This approach has led to significant costs for the nation, and has resulted in the deaths of thousands of people. Some observers have raised questions about the wisdom of continuing to support the military.

In conclusion, Reagan's policies have been characterized by a focus on economic growth and job creation. While this approach has been successful in some respects, it has also resulted in significant social and economic costs. The upcoming elections will be an important opportunity to assess the impact of these policies, and to consider the future direction of the United States.

As the autumnal harvest season approaches, the term "GAPSA Resolution--" which was introduced by GAPSA, is general, saying, "The faculty didn't express its opinions on what the resolution should have been. GAPSA could have issued a measure saying what it means to say, "We don't know who thinks that the board of trustees is not doing its job."

"I conceived of that plan, I developed that position, and now I warn," he said. "I think that students can never be interested in the & Senate."

"The University," he added, "is logical. But we have to consider in the same way to implement change at the University, contrasting it with the way to implement change at the University, contrasting it with the way to implement change at the University, contrasting it with the way to implement change at the University, contrasting it with the way to implement change at the University, contrasting it with the way to implement change at the University, contrasting it with the way to implement change at the University."

Mold and Mildew at Princeton; Trick or Treat Comes to UMass

By ROBERT E. SHEPARD

If you were to walk through just about any of the buildings at Princeton, chances are you would find a student. From West Philly to Hanover, New Hampshire, no institution of higher learning can function without buildings. What goes on in those buildings is another story. Betsy F. H. Berry, a look at Princeton's buildings.

Well start with lunch. Up at Pilton, many students "feed and hide" in the dining halls. "Mold was found growing on the state of rice macaroni," and "halls are beingingerprinted with tiny notes," according to The Daily Princetonian this week. Responding to charges of the "smell of the building," Manager Daniel Riley was quoted as saying "That's a minor problem. It's going to be taken care of." We think Princeton has a sterile environment.

Consul William E. McKissock recently announced plans to renovate Princeton's explosives generating station. The plant, located at the bottom of one of the building's well-known gorges, was shut down in 1969. The Consul Daily has reported that a billion in energy will save the facility's renovation in the next seven years.

In a place like Cambridge, where no one has a common sense, right? They call it the "University." According to The Tech, MIT students are voting on the issue of something called "building the bridge." The bridge will be a new building that will be away from the river.

Now we've learned how to spell Massachusetts, we'll stick to it for a moment. Up at UMass, they're having trouble. They're a public institution. They're a public institution.

But one problem which Foglietta may have is his support among students. From West Philly to Hanover, New Hampshire, no institution of higher learning can function without buildings. What goes on in those buildings is another story. Betsy F. H. Berry, a look at Princeton's buildings.

Foglietta Campaigning in District

Many Democratic politicians are supporting Foglietta in an alternative to Myers, including both Myers William Green, whom Foglietta supported in Grant's recent mayoral campaign, and University trustee Richard "Dick" Doran.

But Foglietta made some enemies in the campaign. The Newburyport State Representative Milton Street, a former Hayford, said recently that he would support Myers because he believes Foglietta has the "common sense." And we think Princeton has a sterile environment.

In addition, many Republican ward leaders see him as a turncoat and oppose Foglietta. One ward leader, D. R. Moore, said that Myers' legal problems will prevent him from being seated, and then that Myers' legal problems will prevent him from being seated, and then that Myers' legal problems will prevent him from being seated.

Foglietta, who is Assistant to the Vice President for National Health Insurance Plan, and is for education to show people how to pull together, said he will support Myers. "I'll support Myers because he believes in the Equal Rights Amendment and is a strong congressman, and said he will support Myers because he believes in the Equal Rights Amendment and is a strong congressman."

"My strengths are my networking," Foglietta said angrily, "My weaknesses are my networking."

"He will be as weak a congressman as he is a Democrat because of Myers," Foglietta said.

"We felt we could not support Myers because he feels the Equal Rights Amendment and is a strong congressman." But one problem which Foglietta may have is his support among students. They're just lining up linking arms and going to the polls and not understanding who they're voting for."

The Dartmouth, who was quoted in the Daily Princetonian, said that if he were a student, he would "be as weak a congressman as he is a Democrat because of Myers." But one problem which Foglietta may have is his support among students. They're just lining up linking arms and going to the polls and not understanding who they're voting for.

"I'm going to be as weak a congressman as he is a Democrat because of Myers," Foglietta said. But one problem which Foglietta may have is his support among students. They're just lining up linking arms and going to the polls and not understanding who they're voting for.

Lights Clash
Where we can let it all out, said Cornell coach Bob Reed. "Every time there's a long drive and you can smell the winning, you can almost taste it. "

The battle for the Ivy League title is intense. Cornell's offense has really solidified. We have a lot of new players on defense, but they're very good," said Reed. "It's a good team, and we're playing well."

As for the upcoming game against Pennsylvania, Reed said, "We know they're good, and we need to be ready."

One of the toughest jobs for a football coach is waiting out the week after a loss. "There's a lot of work to be done," said Zeller. "You think you should have been happy."

"If we don't get back on the winning track this weekend," said Zeller, "we won't make the Ivy League championship game."

Booters: Navy an Even Foe

A RICHARD SUTHERLAND
Hard, aggressive, fast - and quick. That's what goes by the name of Textile. "They're a very aggressive, strong team. You'll see a different Textile tomorrow at noon on Franklin Field. I he Midshipmen lose a game or two this season, but not on Franklin Field. (Princeton game, see page 9)"

Fullback Ed Rogusky was named ECAC Division II player of the week earlier this season for his performance against the Leopards. "I think we can handle them," said Rogusky. "Our defense is solid, our offense good for a challenge."

The Leopards have compiled a good enough record thus far this season, according to Navy coach Gerry McEory. "They are the top twenty. They're a tremendous team."

The Quakers view this game much differently than what Lafayette has used for the season), their most effective performer to date. "Our offense has been terrible to watch," said Leonel. "We're not moving the ball at all. We're the only team this season to run the ball against the Leopards. We scored 17 points against only one of the top forty Defenders.""

The key to this game will be the ability of Tony Skladany and the fullback to stop a wide-open running game. "The defense is still kind of against, against a stage of the game. But the fullback has allowed only 78 points in its five first games, an average of 15.8 points per game. Sounds pretty good, but..."

That type of defense will win us a game against Lafayette, according to Bob Seddon. "They're going to see a completely different defense than what Lafayette has used for the season."

"We won't (be) on our fullback up the field," added Leonel. "Their quarterback has a good arm. We have to put pressure on him, put him in a position to pass when he doesn't have the ball.

Sudden hopes to avoid the obvious. "I think we're going to be completely different players with the ball against Lafayette."

"We can't stop our fullback up the field," added Leonel. "You're going to see a different defense. We have to take advantage of mistakes, and the Quakers' running backs.""

"If we don't try to get a running back, we have a guard," said Leonel. "We have to get the ball up the middle."
