Candidates Look for End to Losing Streaks

Specter Favored in Senate Race

By DOMANNO

It has been his source of pride for 10 years.

It is the race for the U.S. Senate seat currently being occupied by retiring Republican Richard Schweiker. They are Democrat Joseph Biden and Republican Arlen Specter. And what was expected to be one of the country's most important elections has turned into a two-sided contest in politics. Whether Specter wins or loses, he is sure to become the new champion in the Pennsylvania Senate race.

Specter is running as an independent, the first time in Pennsylvania history. He is vying for the seat vacated by retiring Republican Richard Roe. Specter will be the one to break the losing streak of the voters, offering a winning candidate. Perhaps the only undisputed fact is that one candidate's political career will be closed.

Close House Battle Ends Today

Mayor William Green, District Attorney John Bender and former state Representative Charles Geffen, said less than two weeks ago that Burke had received on-the-ground support. Burke, a South Philadelphia Democrat, is still in the race, and is running as an independent, recently declaring his candidacy for mayor in the city.

If the polls are any indication, Burke will be the one to win. But as the polls open this morning, the race will be too close to call. Most experts agree that the race will be decided by the last minute. A majority of the voters would vote a straight party ticket, but a small number will vote for independent candidates. Burke is one of them. Burke, a South Philadelphia Democrat, is still in the race, and is running as an independent, recently declaring his candidacy for mayor in the city.

Campaign workers refused to speculate on just how the hostage news and instead scheduled a campaign appearance in Hollywood due to Reagan's standing in California. Thomas was expected to attend a convention in the hotel.

Although Carter was expected to be there, with up to ten hundred people, he has been called "stiff" by several of his campaign workers.

One of Myers' few supporters is City Councilman James Tyrone, who has been calling about 500,000 people, "to come out and hear his appeal of the grand jury's indictment."

It's a dedicated group of hard workers, "You can join our team by sending us a check tomorrow, and we'll be there, with top-up-to-the-minute results."

Election day, 1980

It’s importance can be hardly overstated. A president is not elected in one day; he is elected over a period of several years, during which time many factors influence the outcome of the election.

In the case of the 1980 election, one of the most important factors was the economy. The recession that began in 1979 had a significant impact on the voting patterns of the past year. Although the recession began in 1979, its effects were not felt until 1980. The recession hit the working class hardest, especially the blue-collar workers.

The recession also affected the middle class. Many people lost their jobs, and those who were fortunate enough to keep their jobs saw their salaries and benefits cut. The recession also had a negative impact on the stock market, causing many people to lose money they had invested in stocks.

The high unemployment rate and the decline in the stock market contributed to a feeling of economic uncertainty among the American people. This uncertainty was reflected in the political campaign of 1980. The candidates were asked to offer solutions to the problems of the economy, and their proposals were closely scrutinized by the voters.

There were two main candidates in the 1980 election: Ronald Reagan and Jimmy Carter. Reagan was the incumbent president, and he was running for re-election. Carter was running for his second term as president.

Reagan was a conservative Republican who promised to cut taxes and spending and to reduce the size of the federal government. He also promised to strengthen national security and to reverse the trend of inflation. Carter was a liberal Democrat who promised to increase spending on social programs and to expand the role of the federal government. He also promised to reduce the size of the military and to reverse the trend of unemployment.

The election was closely contested, and the outcome was not determined until the very end. Reagan ultimately won the election, carrying 441 electoral votes to Carter’s 354.

The election of 1980 set the stage for the next four years, during which time the economy continued to struggle. The recession that began in 1979 was not fully resolved until 1982. The election of 1980 also marked the beginning of a new era in American politics, as Ronald Reagan became the first Republican president since Dwight Eisenhower in 1952.

Evidence of Incompetence

By Andrew Robins

The major concern theing the op- positional Republican Party is the perceived incompetence of the incumbent president, Ronald Reagan. The party is concerned that Reagan is not capable of dealing with the complex issues facing the nation, and that his policies are not working.

Reagan’s policies have been criticized for a number of reasons. His economic policies have been criticized for being too focused on supply-side economics, and not enough on demand-side economics. His foreign policy has been criticized for being too isolationist, and not enough interventionist.

The opposition party is also concerned that Reagan is not capable of dealing with the issues of the day. They believe that he is not aware of the problems facing the country, and that he is not taking the necessary steps to solve these problems.

The opposition party has put forward a number of candidates to challenge Reagan. These candidates include George Bush, who was the vice president under Reagan, and Bob Dole, who was the Senate majority leader.

The opposition party is also concerned that Reagan is not capable of dealing with the issues of the day. They believe that he is not aware of the problems facing the country, and that he is not taking the necessary steps to solve these problems. They believe that a new president is needed who can bring a fresh perspective to the problems facing the nation.

Well folks this is it. Today marks the last day of the dreary circus. Carl the nutter will be glad — if not his nerves — now that the voters have shown they are tired of this endless drivel. If you want to feel that there will be no more of the same, then Tuesday’s presidential election will be your last chance to defeat the Hubert Humphrey/George McGovern /Jimmy Carter/Edward Kennedy option.

There will be no more bumper sticker campaigns, no more political pamphlets, no more "Bedtime for Bonzo" jokes, Doonesbury cartoons, or Bette Davis, Hollywood’s current embodiment of the politician. There will be no more "Tuesdays with Morrie" stories; Gerald Ford will leave Washington for good, and we can go back to Berkeley. Jerry Falwell will leave his occupation as a religion, and we can all get back to God. There will be no more pollution from those pesky lovely cars — the President’s limousine and the Vice President’s limousine will be free of "A Day with Ronald" stories; Gerald Ford will leave Washington, and we can go back to Berkeley. Billy Carter will go back to his yacht. Larry Kane won’t have to find a ship to write about. There will be no more "a voice for Ronald" jokes; Doonesbury cartoons, or "Bette Davis" jokes. No more bumper stickers. No more "Bedtime for Bonzo" jokes.

Think of it this way. From now on there will be no more(?:). There will be no more bumper stickers. No more "Bedtime for Bonzo" jokes. Larry Kane won’t have to find a ship to write about. No more bumper stickers. No more "Bedtime for Bonzo" jokes.

Forget the political endorsements of Jimmy Carter’s insulting distortion of the Peace Corps, and ignore the political endorsements of Billy Carter’s insulting distortion of the Peace Corps. Forget the political endorsements of Jimmy Carter’s insulting distortion of the Peace Corps, and ignore the political endorsements of Billy Carter’s insulting distortion of the Peace Corps.

No more bumper stickers. No more "Bedtime for Bonzo" jokes. Larry Kane won’t have to find a ship to write about. No more bumper stickers. No more "Bedtime for Bonzo" jokes.

The Circus Finally Folds its Tents

From now on there will be no more bumper stickers. No more "Bedtime for Bonzo" jokes. Larry Kane won’t have to find a ship to write about. No more bumper stickers. No more "Bedtime for Bonzo" jokes.

No more bumper stickers. No more "Bedtime for Bonzo" jokes. Larry Kane won’t have to find a ship to write about. No more bumper stickers. No more "Bedtime for Bonzo" jokes.

We will shut down. President Carter will shut down. There will be no more bumper stickers. No more "Bedtime for Bonzo" jokes. Larry Kane won’t have to find a ship to write about. No more bumper stickers. No more "Bedtime for Bonzo" jokes.

The debates, the primaries, and the ultra-fabulous fund raisers will fade into memory.

Women's Soccer Club: Fighting the Odds

BY KEN BERENSTAIN

It's not often that you hear people say you are fighting the odds. But that's exactly what the University's women's soccer team is doing this year.

At the University, the women's soccer program is a result of the decision of the Student Activities Council. There were several different approaches which disqualify club teams from varsity status in the athletic world. Members of the women's soccer squad understand that their work has been in the hands of the Student Activities Council. The lack of a home field is a problem that would be solved if the club attained varsity status.

Students and fans of the women's soccer team want it to be a team that can compete against other teams. The goal is to have the club become a varsity team. This would be the only way to compete against other teams in the Ivy League and other conferences.

The University has made some progress in the past year. The team had its first season ticket sale and the squad is hoping to continue this trend in the future.
