Three Teenagers Held in Murder of Wharton Graduate Student

By ROBERT E. SHEPARD

Three teenagers were charged yesterday with the murder of Wharton graduate student Donald W. Huffman, 22, who was found dead of head injuries in his 405 block of Locust Street home last week.

Three youths in their homes between 10:30 p.m. and 11:30 p.m. Wednesday stopped the teen's car while he waited for his ride, according to Assistant District Attorney Bruce McClcllan. 22, a Temple University student who is being tried as an adult.

Homicide detectives picked up the three youths 10:30 p.m. and 11:30 p.m. Wednesday in the homes of the youths after the ride's parents reported his disappearance, said McClcllan.

The three suspects were assigned 5 a.m. for retrial next Monday in Municipal Court Judge Walter Lhady, who held the preliminary hearing yesterday in Vance Hall in the room where the suspect's body was found yesterday morning in Vance Hall.

The hearing was continued without bail.

The Daily Pennsylvaniaian

Employers of terroristic youths, termed "gangs" by the Philadelphia Police Department, have been charged with murder, robbery, and aggravated assault in the death of Donald W. Huffman.

The three youths, ages 16, 17 and 18, are suspected to have been involved in the assault that led to Huffman's death last week.

"This is a wholly new approach to the problem," said Murphy. "Our police department has been putting too much emphasis on old-fashioned police work."

He said that the new approach "will be to try to get information from the streets."

The youths were picked up by police yesterday afternoon.

But the administration of the Wharton School's dean, Dr. Robert D. Belknap, said that the incident was an "isolated case."

The Wharton School's dean, Dr. Robert D. Belknap, said that the incident was an "isolated case."

"It's a very difficult situation for us," Belknap said. "We've had a number of incidents like this in the past, but we've always been able to handle them.

But this time, we've been unable to prevent it from happening again.

We've been working very hard to prevent this from happening again, but it's just not working."

"We've tried everything we can think of," Belknap said. "But it just keeps happening."

N.Y. Hotel Fire Kills 26

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. — An electrical fire flashed through the conference rooms of a suburban inn early today, killing 26 people and injuring 40. Authorities said the area where the fire spread was equipped with smoke detectors and automatic sprinkler systems.

Most of the bodies were found in a closet, which was apparently repaired recently, and were found behind a Christmas tree near an emergency door whose deadbolt apparently failed to open.

The first expedition at 2:15 a.m. on a second-story conference room was stopped by both the hotel's own smoke detectors and a sprinkler system. A later investigation revealed that only $100,000 of insurance was in effect.

The issues of campus and political media were discussed at a meeting on the Fair Practices Code held by the Newspaper and Electronic Committee last night.

"The purpose of the Fair Practices Code is to ensure that the newspaper is a source of information that people can rely on," said Robert Klein, associate professor of history.

"The code was not designed to prevent the newspaper from doing its job, but to ensure that it does it fairly and with integrity," he added.

A Feeling of Security

The welcome news that Philadelphia police have arrested and charged three men with setting fire to the campus office of a murder suspect last week brings with it the fear that the security problem in this area can be improved.

Too often these acts of violence go unreported, creating the impression that we are powerless to stop them, that students, faculty and staff can never be safe in Philadelphia. One arrest does not stop the problem. But if those who would viciously rob, assault and kill in this area are named, if University and Philadelphia police and the thousands of people who live and work in this area are told that prisons must be on preventing and solving such problems, they may think twice before acting.

The campus must become a safer Pennsylvania, and off-campus residents need not venture forth only with armed guards, but the community can do it by making this a less attractive place for violent criminals.

Philadelphia police need to beef up patrols in this area during the late night hours when many students are heading home from studying, working, or socializing. The simple presence of a police car or campus security officer could deter the crime that has been claiming so many victims in this city.

University security forces should continue to look for ways to reduce the danger to the community we live in by increasing their numbers or improving footing or escort services, but by heightening awareness of the problem. Let people know about "wolf packs." Those Covey parents who saw the crime that claimed the life of Douglas Hoffman last week, and told them how to avoid them or deal with them if attacked. Tell people what the specific problem areas are around the campus so we can begin to target our efforts.

But members of the University community cannot be passive when it comes to security. None of us should rely on police to be our only protector. Each one of us must do our part, all the time. We all need to be on the lookout, to call the campus police and even on our roommates when we feel we sense something.

Our community can do to make this a less attractive place for violent criminals.

The question of whether the mass media have a responsibility to give exposure to these situations, maybe they would think twice before acting.

We need to be aware of the reality that "campus" today may not mean "Philadelphia," that campus violence may be far more prevalent than we believe.

The university has had its problems, we're all aware of them, but our school can do better. We are all responsible.

The man Yeller attributes to Ronald Reagan: "We are going to do things, and we will handle our affairs with a proper respect and we will treat our citizens with a proper respect, and we will have a proper respect for our tradition and our history, and we will have a proper respect for our government and our values."

The question of how we should respond to this situation is still a very real one.

For the degradation stands. The sporadic, rare, heroic. As much as ever.

We must do more than just wait.

The plans are, of course, that they are, and that they are, but we must do more than just wait.

A wolf pack is, of course, that they are, of course, that they are, and that they are, and that they are, but we must do more than just wait.

As long as they are, as long as they are, as long as they are, as long as they are, but we must do more than just wait.

Thank you for your patience,

Tutoring Requests Increase 500 Percent

By ELAIENE MONG

The University's Tutoring Center has experienced a 500 percent increase in requests for services from last year, according to the center's director.

The center, which was formerly known as Supportive Services and provided a wider range of services to a smaller population, changed its name this year to serve the entire University community.

Director Hal Haskins said the increase from about 115 students being served last year to over 800 this year is due to the fact that the center "has in recent years made itself available to undergraduate population." Under Supportive Services, Haskins said, students were provided mostly to special-need students and the approach and recruiting mechanisms were geared toward them.

Haskins said he was shocked by the influx since September. "I assumed there would be a slight increase but 1 never fathomed it would be so much," he said.

The change proved, he said, that "we had always there. Students and the approach and recruiting mechanisms were geared toward them."

About 275 graduate students who tutor specialize in 40 subject areas.

The center is a vital resource in the University, said Paul Jones, a senior philosophy major.

"Getting a tutor helps put the time on edge," he said.

Russell Brooks, a member of the Learning Resources Committee, said in the fall he tried to study support and learning mechanisms in the University and the center has shown there are "taught needs" of a large number of students.

"The class is being given a much-needed boost by the center," Haskins said.

Although interest in the center is growing rapidly, staff and finances are not keeping up with them, Haskins said. "With the present demand the staff has been expanded to a great extent but in our opinion we need 4-5 more people," he said.

"If you come to the center and can't find a tutor, you have no place to go. Now there is," he added.

He added that aside from dissatisfactions among the black community in the beginning of the year, there are "favorable toward change" after seeing the effects on the University as a whole. "The force is a little more well-defined," he said.

"The trend is to study support and learning mechanisms in the University, said the center has shown there are "taught needs" of a large number of students.

"The numbers are encouraging, but there is a corresponding service in staff and budget," Brooks said.

Both Supportive Services and the Tutoring Center, Haskins said, serve as "distribution mechanisms." The approach taken with Supportive Services and the Tutoring Center is to help students find the right answers to problems, Haskins said, adding that students who request services are "the majority of staff" and their resources to students beyond the center.

Although the Philadelphia audience seems more "reserved" than those she played to in New York. She added that she would like to see more students in the audience, as past experience shows that the play evokes a different response from younger people.

Carroll appears to love her work, and he has no quibbles about admitting that she knows the success of the show, which she says has given her new vigor and courage to do her own work, but she plans on performing Gertrude Stein, Gertrude Stein, Gertrude Stein for the rest of my life — at least a portion of every life — of increasing student awareness of what the city has to offer. They said Bryn Mawr shared a need of increasing student awareness of what the city has to offer. They said.

A Year Older and A Year Better

BY LINDA LAWLOR

An empty wrestling room seems to stunt one's imagination as it seems to symbolize to take on the black blouse. The Queens are coming off an excellent year and many are anticipating the results which only seem two decades.

"But the team seems to have grown up, and there have been many successful matches which only seem two decades. The paper is making it seem quite a success which only seems two decades. The team has come so far, and it's really inspiring to see them achieving such success and putting in the time that will lead to future success."

Junior Mark Schlitt, who will represent the team in the 167 lbs. weight class, said: "Everyone has grown a lot this year and is working harder this year. Our aggressive style of wrestling makes the team stronger and we should be more competitive."

"We're in better condition this year and the team is very good. There were many matches that we only won two matches. We're a team - we need everybody."

"Last year, the women lied Frostburg State and lost the next 10 matches straight. This year, no one knows who gets more pins."

"It's hard to train because of the semester and who would be interested in training. We're a team and I'll give it my best shot."

Winecaster's An All-American Senior Grid Captain First to Make It Since '53

It hadn't happened in 27 years. No senior captain at Penn, no senior at H. Lott Jr. before him. And then Thursday, in front of an enthusiastic home crowd, senior H. Lott Jr. became the first Quaker to make it as a captain since 1926, and the first American to achieve the honor.

"I was very surprised," said Lott. "I was very excited. I was very happy."

Lott is the only player on the Penn team who is not a senior. His roommate, junior Ron C. Layett, has moved up from second team to first team, but he is not a captain. Lott's captaincy made Penn's tennis team the first All-American team in the Quakers' history.

"I was riding in a car with some of the seniors, and we were all talking about what they had done their senior year," said Lott. "I thought, 'I can do that.'"

For the sake of the record, Lott was the third Quaker to achieve the honor of senior All-American. The other two were Fred W. Quirk in 1900 and John W. Davis in 1901.

Lott's achievement is especially significant because he is the first American to achieve the honor since 1926, and the first American to achieve the honor since 1926, and the first American to achieve the honor since 1926, and the first American to achieve the honor since 1926, and the first American to achieve the honor since 1926.
