The atmosphere and tension surrounding the event would have been noticeably different. It was not an event, but a rally organized to challenge the University’s move to end the funding of suburban power. Security forcespatrolled the grounds outside the meeting, and demonstrating students were thus unable to make their voices heard.

It is ironic, however, that this event occurred during the final stages of the Vietnam era and the beginning of the Watergate period—not a time when organized student demonstrations were widely supported. The Vietnam War was, however, an event that was much more than a power struggle. It is even more ironic that 1975, the year in which students protested outside of early registration and a draft board at Fraternity meeting, were demonstrating against a 15 percent tuition increase.

The basic difference between the two events is that the 1975 “war” on tuition was so much more important to students than the university’s apparent inaction. The Monterrey and the Franco demonstrations were protesting against “the University’s contempt for the spirit of the Sunflower’.” The 1975 OPD national strike involved taking action at the open meeting. The Trustees chose to make important decisions regarding the rising costs of education. The university still bears this burden.

I was asked to break it down. This is what I found.

This weekly income of $4.50 per week isn’t enough for a few credits with a good meal. The same thing applies to an additional $30.00 a week, which included his living expenses. However, after taking out for pay, it adds up to a half of a meal. We are up and I am, hardly. It seems

For the second consecutive year, The Daily Pennsylvania has received the prestigious Medalist Award from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association. This award, the Association’s highest honor, is given to a select few college newspapers considered to be “truly outstanding” by its Board of Judges.

Again in 1980, the DP’s complete and incisive news reporting and wide-ranging sports coverage, photographic quality, effective advertising and attractive graphic design combined to win recognition for the tradition of excellence the DP has been proud of since 1885.

The DP’s 34th Street Magazine also received high honors from the Columbia judges: the weekly arts and entertainment magazine received a First Place award from the Association in only its first year of competition.

The Daily Pennsylvania wants you to become part of its tradition of excellence. The DP is an entirely student-run organization. Staff members work as much or as little as they want, from a few hours a week every now and then to more than 40 hours a week.

At the DP you’ll learn all you need to know — on the job. Unlike other college papers, the DP does not have special training programs for new staff members. You’ll go right to work as a news, sports or feature reporter. Or in advertising, where you’ll gain practical sales experience not found in a classroom. Or on the business staff, which manages a $300,000 budget. Or production, 34th Street. And photography.

Come to our introductory meeting Friday, January 16, at 4:30 p.m., at the DP offices at 4015 Walnut Street. Just follow the signs to the second floor. Or if you can’t make it, call Scott Heller at 243-6585 Sunday through Thursday evenings.

Be a part of a tradition of excellence. And have fun doing it. Join us. The Daily Pennsylvania.

Tracy Resigns Advocate Position
To Head Employment Council

ROBERT WOJTOWICZ

Student Advocate Carol Tracy has resigned her position to chair the University Equal Employment Opportunity Council in November. She succeeds Gregorian, who will remain director of the Women's Center.

"If I'll take a close look at non-faculty recruitment and hiring, and advertising," she added.

Tracy said she was "not pleased" with the current performance of affirmative action programs. "Affirmative action programs are still not on top of the laws," she said. "Quite frankly I went in terms that affirmative action programs have never been trained."

Student advocate, Tracy served as a "tolerated shelter for students," she said. "I had had about getting it, too. We've been fighting through, just to make a major impact.

Once a week Tracy said she felt that there was an impact was the presidential election. "I was very hopeful I would win," she said. "Quite frankly I was going to change things."

Carol Tracy, Health EDUC

As student advocate, Tracy fought that students needed to have more legal matters. She said there is a definite need for the University to hire a lawyer "who would report directly to the students," she added.

The case is still being investigated,

Bruce McClellan, a Temple University MBA candidate, and a companion, were attacked at 2:45 a.m. on November 25 and are still not assigned.

Two Seized For Murder

Three people by information from members of the community, police and the three people who were attacked at 2:45 a.m. on November 25, were arrested at 2:45 a.m. on November 25.

Tracy said the registrar's office has done the search controversy last semester. "I'd like to open up the training programs (for affirmative action officers)" she said. "I'd like to open up the training programs (for affirmative action officers)" she said. "I'd like to open up the training programs (for affirmative action officers)" she said. "I'd like to open up the training programs (for affirmative action officers)"

Professor Somerville said a new student advocate would be appointed, but noted that it will require a major search to find someone as well-suited to the role, "I will take my time," she said.

To take a close look at non-faculty recruitment and hiring, one student said, "Quite frankly I'm going to change things."

Assistant U. Secretary Appointed

By MARK BROITMAN

Gail Levin, former assistant director of the University Press, has assumed the post of assistant secretary of the Board of Overseers.

Secretary of the University Mary Ann Moore resigned last month, a University attorney, to succeed Linda Smith. Her nomination was later approved by the Executive Board of the Trustees.

Levin said her job at the Press, "a largely administrative position," has prepared her well for her new appointment.

"The great challenge and the beauty of administration," she said. "As the years go by, her position at the Press has brought her to the office of the secretary a broadly based knowledge of Pennsylvania and of universities in general."

The secretary's office is responsible for organizing and coordinating functions of the Trustees and the Boards of Overseers, as well as serving as a repository for records of meetings held.

As assistant secretary, Levin will be replacing the secretary of the Board of Overseers, each of which administers a school, the president, and the dean of a school. In addition, they serve as liaison with the Trustees. The Boards of Overseers are composed of between 10 and 25 persons with a range of backgrounds, including scholars, alumni, and others interested in the university.

"There's a lot I have to become familiar with," Levin said. She called her new work "stimulating and diverse."

"I think the office of the secretary...is about the best job one can possibly have working with such an organization," she said.

Levin received a Ph.D. in English from the University of Virginia in 1976 after finishing undergraduate work at Wheaton College. She began her career at the Press, where she served for five and a half years as assistant to the director before becoming associate director a year ago.

After Invite in Ivies, W. Squash Ready for Ivies by RACHEL ASCHER

The Quakers faced a tough challenge in preparing for the upcoming Ivy league matches. The requirement played a total of eleven matches, including the Canadian Invitational, in which they placed third.

"What theQuakers faced was that the Canadian squash rates vary greatly from American squash. The Quakers would work on whatever their opponent was used to and try to play to their game," said Mark Wintrier.

"The enthusiasm here is a little more. It's our job to be more involved in the campaign. Workmanlike and consistent," said the squad's co-captain Mark Wintrier.

"It's our job to be more involved and play with more confidence and just go out and enjoy the game," said Wintrier.

"The experience will be a much more consistent level of opponents. I think we can be consistent 20 nights on. That's what we're striving for. Right now we have been catching each other at a quick match. We're after a great and steady confidence," said Wintrier.

"It's a big morale booster," said the co-captain.

"We had to whack the ball a lot harder," noted Cindy Schrader, who played in the number four spot for most of the matches. "This whole game was very different than the last year's game."

For the average student, winter break means nothing. But for the members of the Harvard men's basketball team, the end of finals was the beginning of the end of a ten-game losing streak.

The Harvard men's basketball team had been in a rut ever since they lost to the University of Massachusetts. Since then, they had lost ten straight games, including an 86-57 defeat by the University of Pennsylvania on December 29.

The Harvard men's basketball team was not the only team to have suffered a similar fate. The Penn men's basketball team had also lost ten straight games, including an 86-57 defeat by the University of Pennsylvania on December 29.
