The United States and its Western allies will create economic carrots in each area at agriculture and fishing during the 1980s, in response to the growing power of Third World nations, an economic expert said here Friday.

The other economic forecasts for which was a preliminary report released by the "Wharton Strategic Planning Conference - From the Eighties," held Friday. Conference participants included business, agricultural, and other experts.

The report, "FOCUS: The Eighteenth Century Challenge for Management Education," was the result of interviews of chief executive officers of 25 Fortune 500 companies, owners of small businesses, representatives of the academic community, and govern

Support Workers Strike City Schools

SUPPORT WORKERS STRIKE CITY SCHOOLS

The support workers described as "forces behind the students" have decided to go on strike, demanding a 20 percent pay increase and the establishment of "statutory rights," which would include time off for vacations and sick leave. The workers have been working without a contract for nearly a year and are hoping to force the school district to negotiate.

Reagan May Raise Debt Ceiling

WASHINGTON — President Reagan came into office promising to shed spending and taxes, but his first budget, released today, projects a $1.1 billion deficit in fiscal 1981-82. The president has asked Congress to raise the national debt limit from the current $935.1 billion to $985 billion.

Polish Union Cancels Strike

WARSAW, Poland — The farmers' union Solidarity decided yesterday to call off nationwide workers' strikes after reaching agreement in support of private farmers demanding their own independent status. The union's president, who had been negotiating with the government, announced the settlement today.

Meyerson

An Impressively Controversial Career Concludes

By DOM MANNO

Mr. Meyerson has been the subject of a great many rumors and speculations concerning his reasons for stepping down at this time. As Meyerson himself has noted, he is a man of many passions, and his departure leaves many questions unanswered.

His retirement has been described as a personal choice, and he has stated that he is looking forward to a new chapter in his life. However, many have speculated that his decision was influenced by the controversies that have surrounded him throughout his tenure as University president. These controversies have included issues such as the management of the University's financial resources, the handling of student protests, and the implementation of academic reforms.

Meyerson's major failing was not that he lacked a vision of the University, but that he failed to bring it to fruition. He leaves office with a record supporting claims that he was a progressive one, in which a transformation of the University was to be brought about through an emphasis on quality and excellence. Nevertheless, with responsibility center budgeting and the founding of the School of Public and Urban Policy, Meyerson's leadership was on guiding the University toward a new era of financial stability and the leadership crisis culminated in Meyerson's announcement on September 6, 1978, because he promised academic innovation, shared decision-making, and an effort to place the University's support is the story of the University during the 1970s.

The “One University” report, which he said will be ready by

The creation of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences, the founding of the School of Public and Urban Policy, and the new emphasis on quality and excellence, were among the major accomplishments of the Meyerson administration. These initiatives were intended to strengthen the University's position in the academic community and to provide an improved student experience. However, the implementation of these reforms was not without controversy, and Meyerson's leadership style was often criticized for its lack of transparency and responsiveness to student concerns.

The beginning of the end for the Meyerson administration came when the University's financial resources were strained. The University had to cut back on its budget, which led to a reduction in faculty positions and the suspension of some academic programs. The University's financial situation further deteriorated when it was revealed that the University had been distributing funds to student athletes in violation of NCAA rules. This led to a loss of student-athlete eligibility and a severe reduction in the University's athletic programs.

Meyerson's legacy is a mixed one. On the one hand, he brought a measure of financial stability to the University and made some important contributions to the University's academic programs. On the other hand, his leadership was often criticized for its lack of responsiveness to student concerns and for its failure to communicate its vision effectively to the University community. It is clear that Meyerson's tenure as University president was marked by both successes and challenges, and that his legacy will be the subject of much debate and discussion in the years to come.

The Trustee Committee on University Responsibility decided Thursday that a Citibank loan to the South African government does not violate University policy.

The loan will aid the construction of hospitals, housing, and schools for non-whites.

The Trustee loan was considered a special case because the University owns bonds in the company, but no stock. When the committee prepared their "Report on South Africa" in January of 1980, it only provided guidelines for equity investments.

"We will continue our bond interest in Citibank," said Trustee A. Leon Higginbotham, representing the committee at the Trustee meeting Friday. "We unanimously agreed that these types of bonds, properly monitored, serve the best interests of everyone."

The Citibank decision is in compliance with the Trustees' guidelines for equity investment in firms doing business with South Africa. The January report states the University should only approve loans that "support projects which substantially benefit non-whites and could not likely be undertaken without foreign support."

The policy was written in response to protests against South Africa's policy of apartheid.

According to Mike Siegmund, student liaison to the committee, the Citibank decision does not set a precedent for other bond questions.

"The Trustees thought that this loan, on its merits alone, is something the University should support," said Siegmund. "But the entire policy on South Africa will be reviewed in the fall."

Debate Over ‘Killer’ Draws Few

Prof. Holmes Bradford: I’ve been in a departmental meeting all morning. The ingrown wit of provincial academe was even more labored than usual today.

By ROBERT WOITOWICZ

Fewer than 20 people turned out Friday to see Senior Class President Myles Berkowitz and FAS senior Kevin Sidel discuss the controversy surrounding the game ‘Killer.’ ‘I’m not going to defend ‘Killer,’” Berkowitz said before the discussion, adding that the forum would not be a “debate” between the two.

“I don’t feel I was wrong in bringing ‘Killer’ to campus,” he said. “There was time for protest in November.”

Berkowitz said coverage of Killer by The Daily Pennsylvanian had not had an adverse effect on Killer. “There hasn’t been a mass exodus from the game for moral reasons,” he said. “We are 21-year-olds and we know the difference between right and wrong. That’s why I thought it would be wrong to stop or limit this game.”

In defense of his calling National Urban League director Vernon Jordan, Sidel said, “I don’t know how we can play a game that was called ‘Catherine: The Amnesiac Game.’”

Berkowitz said he had contacted FAS senior Victor Jordan, daughter of the commencement speaker, about Killer. “She thought that personally, the game was a silly diversion and not a problem,” he said.

“Let’s not talk about a game,” FAS senior Jeffrey Jacobs said. “Physical violence is what bothers me.”

Throughout the discussion, Berkowitz said the number of protesters was small. “There is no split in the senior class over this game,” he said.

Saturday's match between Penn and Cornell was one of the most emotional of the season for the Quakers. In the final game of the home season, the Quakers defeated Cornell, 7-5, to claim their second consecutive Ivy League victory and end their three-game losing streak.

The Quakers' victory was anything but a sure thing, however, as Cornell was able to make a comeback in the match. After Cornell took a 2-1 lead, the Quakers were able to tie the match at 2-2, and then went on to win the rest of the games to claim the overall victory.

The Quakers' win was important for several reasons. First, it was a significant win for the team, as it was their second consecutive Ivy League victory. Second, it ended their three-game losing streak, which had been a cause for concern amongst the team. Finally, it was a morale booster for the team, as they were able to show that they were capable of winning even against a strong opponent.

The Quakers' victory was a result of their hard work and dedication. They had been working hard in practice and on the court, and it paid off in the end. The team's coach, Coach Rich Applebaum, was proud of the team's performance and said that they had played well.

Despite the victory, the team was aware of the challenges that lay ahead. They knew that they would have to continue to work hard in practice and on the court in order to stay competitive in the upcoming matches. But for now, they were celebrating their win and looking forward to the next game

Weekend Leaves Women With Mixed Results

The women's volleyball team lost a hard-fought battle against Cornell on Saturday, dropping the final game of the season. The match was a thrilling one, with both teams playing their best and pushing each other to the limit.

The Quakers started strong, taking the first set 25-21. However, Cornell rallied in the second set, taking it 25-19, and then went on to win the final set 25-16. The Quakers' coach, Lois Fullmer, was disappointed with the loss, but recognized the effort that her team put in.

Despite the loss, the Quakers were able to take some positives from the game. Fullmer noted that the team played well, particularly in the first set, and that they were able to go toe-to-toe with one of the best teams in the league. She also praised the team's resilience, as they were able to fight back in the second set and show that they were not done.

The Quakers' next game is against Brown on Monday, and Fullmer is hoping that they will be able to build on the momentum from their last game and come out on top.
