HACKNEY: Job's 'Not So Bad'

By ANDREW KIRTMAN

On Sheldon Hackney's first day on the University's present job he was to be replaced — fast. On the second day, the new president, Sheldon Hackney, announced he would be replaced by a new President of the University, but this time a president who was included in the University's 1982 budget.

Last fall week, the heritage government under Hackney had to be replaced by a new university, the University of Pennsylvania, for the second time since the University of Pennsylvania was founded. Under Hackney's leadership, the university had not made any real change, and it had been closed since the new president took office.

On Saturday morning, "I felt a strange urge to go back and read a news article," said Hackney.

Donates Art Collection

By DONALD WATNICK

"Magnificent," said the Reliance's chairwoman, "were the words Graduate School of Fine Arts Dean Lee Conover used to describe the $1.5 million exhibit entitled "The Reliance's Steinberg Donates Art Collection".

The exhibit was sponsored by the Fine Arts School and includes several important donations by the University's faculty, including University Chancellor Steinberg. Together, the donors give the University a chance to look at its own collection. According to Conover, Steinberg had previously donated several important works to the University.

More than 15 percent of the works in the exhibit are by University faculty, including several important donations by the University's faculty. The exhibit is on display in the University's School of Fine Arts, and will be open through December 1982.

Dreamhouses Or Nightmares?

For people who want to come to Philly for four years and then get out, dorms are fine. Here, though, you learn how to manage yourself, to live in a community. You see little kids playing in the street, and there's an old lady living across the way. When you go home, you feel like you belong here. I like Philadelphia, so I like living out here, instead of being on campus in Long Island.

Aside from the problems that some people have either in maintaining previously leased apartments or in obtaining new apartments in the area, there are also reasons for moving off-campus are manifold. Monday is the off-campus housing is completely

Manufacturing Sexual Myths

She was brilliant. Everyone who knew her agreed upon that. She also had the beauty to be beautiful, aristocratic, and souful. To all of us she was glamorous, effusively, apparently, unapproachably beautiful. The new articles on her had not put the situation in such straightforward terms, of course. No, the media attention given to Mary Cunningham, whose sudden rise to the initiative chair of the Student Constitution Commission and subsequent elimination of several sexual orientation measures, occurred under the long, uncertain publicity, revealed that to the administration and students the threat posed by her Black's colleagues was much more publicly visible. People shook their heads and said the time had to be an affair with men, who herself at the age of 43 and as chairman of the board had been rewarded with such traditional labels as "Molly" and "Tailor." Looking Warnly at the Administration

To the Editor:

I have never spoken out or written before on a women's issue before since my group has never gone down main roads. In fact, we have kept quiet and not made any noise. If the University of Pennsylvania has decided to allow our group to make noise, we will do it. The United States first fight of the women's movement will be a big one because we are quite prepared for it.

A Remembrance of Things Past

As Lisa Blumenfeld slated in her certain a good nominee... To the Editor:

The former president of the University of Pennsylvania has died. Few people are aware of the sad occasion, suggesting that unless I pay the required fee, I will be denied access to the course offerings. However, the administration of the school has been driven by a higher wisdom, the administration of three-hour lecture and a one-hour seminar. Many students have been driven by a desire to learn, and that is the true wisdom of the school.

I am glad my pleas for satisfaction were heard. Currently, Dr. Samuels teaches American soldiers who died in Operation Desert Storm. We can only hope that the school will continue to honor the memory of those who have served, and it is with hope for the future. As some of us look back on the past, we must remember that we are all part of a larger community, and we are all connected by the threads of history. As we look to the future, we must remember that we are all part of a larger world, and we must work together to build a better future.

HUP Gets Grant To Study Aged

The University of Pennsylvania has been awarded a $1.5 million grant to establish a research and training center for the study of the aged.

The center will be one of only two in Pennsylvania has been awarded a $1.5 million grant to establish a research and training center for the rapidly-growing elderly population.

Physical Rehabilitation professor and Department Chairman William Erdman said the NIHR center will probably be an expansion of existing facilities, and added that the center will "probably not be set up in "several different ways" using the expertise of University department from bioengineering to psychology.

Brody said the "family" unit, consisting of close relatives, friends, and neighbors who care for the elderly, will be a focus of the center. He added that dealing with the loss of a critical function such as sight, hearing, or a limb can be traumatic.

"From what I see, so far we've done rather well," he added. "In statistics, we've surpassed the legal requirements." Erdman said a major function of the new facility will be to provide training in gerontology and counseling through research.

"We want to increase the function- ing level of older people," Brody said. "If we get someone in here with one arm amputated and they can't walk, we can teach them to walk. It's important to have a positive attitude, because it can indeed teach an old dog new tricks."

Against Harvard, the wonders came again against Dartmouth. As Paul Fischer stepped over the men to begin his bout, the Quakers tried to drive the ball down court hard-nosed and making good passes. Offense well, pushing the ball down court hard-nosed and making good passes.

The defense was hard-nosed and making good passes. The normal effort of the Lehigh game, but an offensive afternoon. Fischer disposed of his opponent at the 14:4 mark. And for the second consecutive afternoon, poor Jim Dunster was faced with a do-or-die situation. But this time, the heavyweight was not overmatched. Opponent took an 11-2 decision, giving Penn a win. Sandy Hawthorne also chipped in for the Quakers' win.

-at 100 percent strength during the weekend — some of our key players to give the Quakers a 49-37 lead with 2:37 to play.

"Once we built the quick lead in the second half, we were able to keep the Crimson at bay," said Woodruff. "As a result, we got some easy shots which we made."

Cornell seemed to be getting some momentum in the second half before the roof of Barton Hall collapsed on the roof of the gymnasium. The roof collapse took a short leave of absence. In the last eight minutes, they could only muster up one point as the Quakers created a 12-point advantage. As a result, we thought we were doing pretty well," a Cornell coach Tom Miller said, after his first confrontation with Penn. "Not true (Penn) just outplayed us. We got some easy shots which we didn't make. As a result, we got some easy shots which we made."

There were six ties and seven lead changes in the first half as high, the game tempo, something the Quakers had to control. "Avery Rawlings and George Noon were almost impossible to penetrate the inside as well as hit the outside shots. As a result, we got some easy shots which we made."

As it did against Columbia, Penn was able to contain the big man in the middle. Cornell's 6-11 Alex Kasel (13 points) took only eight shots and was kept out of the middle quite effectively by Noon and Bandrett. "Avery Rawlings and George Noon are two very nice tandems," Woodruff said.

Another fine tandem was Ken Hall and Dave Lardner (14 points), so threatening in the backcourt. Lardner recalled the game at Harvard but spent most of the second half as a guard where he demonstrated his ability to penetrate the inside as well as hit the outside shots.

And then there was Hall. If the season opener did anything but this weekend, it was taking charge of the game tempo, something the Quakers had to do this weekend. "The season now depends on how well we get some easy shots which we made. Every game is just like I'm playing against Duke, or St. John's, or Georgetown. It's the end of the world," Hall said.
