Despite Labor Dept. Objections, U. Will Implement Hiring Plan

By PETER CANELO

The University has made a commitment to increasing minority and women applicants and has been implementing an affirmative action plan that is being challenged by the Labor Department. Associate Vice Chancellor David Rummy said Friday that the university is being forced to go on without approval from the Labor Department.

Pending further review, the Labor Department has withdrawn its objections, but has not formally approved of any plan that might result in discrimination defined by federal law.

The job programs provide a place to start for the university, which has had a history of placing minorities and women in entry-level positions.

"I wasn't surprised to learn that the Labor Department is here to come and review the plans," Rummy said.

President Sheldon H. Hackney said Saturday that the university will shift to employing affirmative action plans and discussions on implementation.

"We are aware of the Labor Department's presence over the way we see the job plans," Hackney said.

"I think we're going to try and continue to improve our diversity and minority programs," he added.

The university requested a renegotiation three weeks ago, from the Labor Department for clarification of certain affirmative action programs.

Sunday, Hackney said "the Labor Department's affirmative action review is over the way we see the job plans."

Woman Claims Rape on Campus

Victim Not U. Student

By ROBIN LEWIS

A 17-year-old woman was allegedly raped Friday while she was shopping in the University Square, Police said.

The victim, a sophomore at the University, was shopping in the University Square when she was raped Saturday, Sergeant James Connolly said.

Connolly said the victim said she did not know where the assailant had taken her, but she claimed it was a downtown and there were no other people around.

"It was a very, very disturbing rape," Connolly said.

"We're still saying we should chance on coming to the university," Connolly said.

"There are a lot of the reasons why we're putting this up," Connolly said.

Unity Day Addresses Minority Fin Aid woes

By MARGARET COPENHAGEN

The Admissions Office may work to attract more minority students, according to Director Daisy M. Dance.

"There is some very, very disturbing information coming from the financial aid," Kelly said during "Unity Day," an event sponsored by the United Minorities Council.

"Our goal is to increase the number of minorities that are concerned with attracting minorities from the university and securing community groups for the university," Kelly said.

"It’s a real conundrum for the commuter student," she said. "It’s an opportunity for them to socialize, get away from their daily studies." Vorchheimer said the program was not offered to the entire University because of the busy housing season.

"Of course, you know, there are financial ramifications too," she added. "It’s not a money-making endeavor.

Although there are only about 70 students on the plan, Vorchheimer said they’re benefiting many commuters, with the advantage of having a still a relatively small arena in which to be among their friends. The New Student Orientation week package included the Houston Hall lounge, a $60 resident and $800 budget for meals and supplies for the lounge and social events.

"It’s a place for people to come in and do homework," she said. "It’s not a social affair.

"Very nice, very unique," a group of freshmen said, each of whom said they didn’t have a car. DiGiacomo said the club was open to those who don’t have a car, but commuters. "They’re all doing pretty well. "

"We have a really good group," she said. "The club is really fun." DiGiacomo said the club members who have moved on, and their friends, still spend a lot of time together.

"I felt that a lot of people met their friends outside of classes," the friend added. "I met my classes as a form of nighttime campus experience, plus being around the same dorm group.

"People who don’t have that would have to sacrifice their social interactions," she said. "They’re very close friends, but they don’t have that."

"My classes right after one another," she said. "We’re here three times a week, but they don’t have that."

"People who don’t have that get shut out of a lot." she said. "I feel that a lot of people had to sacrifice their social interactions, but they have a really good group."

PENN FIELDHOUSE

The men's and women's fencing teams returned to Evan's Cherry Hill, N.J., this week after a major loss to Yale in a tournament. The men's team went 2-1 while the women's team went 1-2.

Though a glimmer of hope appeared at first in the women's match, it quickly faded. The Owls had a 1-0 lead going into the second period, but they were outscored 11-3 in the final two periods. The Owls had a 2-0 lead in the first period of the men's match, but the Red won 11-4.

The Owls have been struggling in the fencing season and have yet to win a dual meet. The Owls' last win came in a 10-5 victory over Temple on November 14. The Owls have lost all five meets since then.

The women's team has been particularly struggling, with losses to Yale, Cornell, and Princeton. The men's team has also been struggling, with losses to Cornell and Princeton.

Ivy SOS:
Same Old Successes

CAMBRIDGE, MA. - With Princeton leading the Ivy League in February, the two teams were tied at the top of the ladder. Most observers felt that one of the teams, either Princeton or Dartmouth, would emerge victorious.

The Big Green also had their sights set on the Ivy League championship, but they were not to be denied. Dartmouth's 6-4 center, who had been coming off a successful season, led the team to victory against the Bulldogs, 98-66.
