Students Tackle Real Problems in Business

BARRY DAVIDOWITZ

Colleges have often been criticized for teaching theories that have little application to the real world, but Management 51, a management class run by a private consulting firm, is attempting to approach this problem.

A graduate of Temple University, the director of the Wharton Small Business Development Center, Management 51 gives students the opportunity to act as consultants for small businesses in order to apply problem-solving techniques to the business world.

More students participating in the course, according to one consultant for a local company, is the best way to going about the problem. Instead of sitting in the classroom and working on problems, the students are actually going to the businesses and solving the problems.

Another senior, Jim Donovan, had more positive feelings toward the class.

"I think it's one of the only opportunities at Wharton to get a job and work for a real company while you're in college," Donovan said.

"I think it's a good experience. I think it's a good experience. I think it's a good experience. I think it's a good experience. I think it's a good experience."

Running May Cause Infertility
ATLANTA - Women who run a lot may have trouble getting pregnant because the exercise burns up body fat that is necessary for normal menstrual cycles, a study shows.

The study showed that women who ran more than 40 miles a week for eight years had menstrual cycles that were abnormal. The study also showed that the women had menstrual cycles that were normal when they did not run.

'People's Park': An Unrealized Dream

be explained, referring to the lands raised by the Coalition. There has been much to the north and north of the site for planning the next 12 months. That will be all. The University has a persistent responsibility for the community.

The coalition was established in September 1972 by the Coalition to save the future park site. They included a parade around the area - from community mothers with their children and dogs, and a community group - the West Philadelphia Corporation, St. Mary's Church, the Christian Association, and the Free Library agreed to lend support if the University approved the project. Following a decade of University expansion, during which time the campus doubled in size, the Coalition saw a need for a university to return a piece of public back to the community - back to three acres of land. Now this park would have a sustained, organized, and generate support. The administration, however, announced that the project would be cost-effective and generate support. The administration, however, received a letter to the Coalition and the site was granted.

In 1973, Coalition members presented a proposal for the construction of the park to their President Martin Meyerson's Executive Assistant, Donald Horsey, for assistance. "We have been working with University administrators to discuss the proposed park. The administration, however, announced that the project would be cost-effective and generate support.

"Though this would be a small gesture to be sure, the creation of a park would have certain responsibilities to the neighborhood. It took a lot of Saturdays and Sundays," said Caroline Damsky, a biologist at the Wistar Institute and former Coalition member.

But the original, elaborate plans for the park materialized only in the form of architectural models and computers. "We have no idea - but I do know that the original plan was for a park," said Ruth Molloy, a worker for the University."}

Lesbians and Gays: Overcoming Oppression

By Peter A. Sloman

Encountering Hostility on the Campaign

Letters to the Editor

The importance of just this letter is that I am unsure whether I am writing to persons who are genuinely interested in the issue of gay and lesbian rights, and in the importance of gay and lesbian visibility. I am writing to parents and friends of gay and lesbian young people, to students and teachers, to persons who have been involved in gay and lesbian rights movements, and to persons who have not been involved.

The letter is addressed to the Editor of the Daily Campus, the student newspaper of the University of Connecticut. The letter is signed by the author, who is a gay and lesbian activist and a member of the Connecticut Gay Liberation Group.

The letter begins with a statement of the importance of gay and lesbian visibility and the need for gay and lesbian rights movements to be visible and active. The author states that the importance of visibility is that it allows gay and lesbian people to be seen as individuals, and not as a group that is being oppressed.

The letter then describes the author's experience of encountering hostility on the campaign trail for a seat on the student government, and the difficulties that he faced. The author describes how he had to deal with anti-gay and anti-lesbian harassment, and how he had to work to create an environment of respect and inclusion.

The letter ends with a call to action, and a request for support from the readers of the Daily Campus. The author invites readers to join the movement for gay and lesbian rights, and to support the efforts of gay and lesbian activists.

The letter is an example of activism and courage, and it highlights the importance of visibility and inclusion for gay and lesbian people. It is a call to action, and a call for support, and it is a reminder of the ongoing struggle for gay and lesbian rights.

The lead might have been even bigger, if not for the heroics of Big Green goalie Jim Ulrich. During the second half, a Dartmouth runner was able to stop many of them, but none were as important as those in the final period.

Against Princeton, it all came down to the final ten minutes as Dartmouth tied up the score again. By then, Keith Smothers had been injured. Kay Moore stepped in for the one-mile relay at the last minute. After the race, Turner to pass and clinch second place. "It's the first time we've done that," said Turner. "It was a total team effort. We were strong when we had to be." But the coach. "It was a lot of team effort. As with Wednesday's game..."

The Relays Come to Town

B. HILL, ROSEMEAD

Some events are long-awaited, but is actually turn out to provide as much excitement as it would be to watch a street dance. Often events never mean much to the school, and hence can never arise. And still others, such as excellence, are not realistic even to think of. To see the Penn Relays is one such event that has never materialized in the past 10 years.

The Penn Relays are meant to be a major event in the American athletic calendar, and are held in Franklin Field, Philadelphia. The event started in 1895 and has been held every year since then. The Relays are the largest track and field meet in the world, with thousands of athletes and spectators in attendance. The Penn Relays attract athletes from all over the United States and the world, and are considered one of the premier events in collegiate track and field.

THE 87th PENN RELAYS

The 87th Relays were held over the weekend, starting with the decathlon on Saturday, followed by the women's portion of the event on Sunday. The meet features a wide variety of track and field events, including sprints, middle-distance races, and field events such as long jump and shot put.

THINCLADS UPEND RED

Barrett Breaks Record in Hammer Throw

The conditions were perfect and the atmosphere electric for the 87th Penn Relays. The weather was ideal, and the track was in great condition. This was a special year for the Penn track team, as they were expected to compete for numerous records and championships. Despite some early setbacks, the team rallied to take the lead in the 100 relay, and then went on to capture gold in the 4x400 relay.

Hartlett Breaks Record In Hammer Throw

On Saturday, the thinclads made it two in a row, with Brian Hartlett breaking the world record in the hammer throw. Hartlett's shot was a sensational 78 meters, breaking the previous record by nearly two meters. Hartlett's performance was in line with the high level of competition and excitement that the Penn Relays is known for.
