\section*{Carp Leader Escapes Alleged Deprogramming}

\textbf{Robert Wojtowicz}

The leader of the anti-abortion movement, according to the travesty of the Rev. Runy Moore, said he was visited by a group of people who allegedly kidnapped and threatened to deprogram him last night. "I have to make sure I don't make a mistake, because I'm the founder of the movement," he said. "I was there, and I saw it happen." "I was very interested," he added.

The letter was written to the Rev. John A. Humes, who is a member of the Board of Directors of the National Council of Churches. "We are very interested, when we heard of my case, they were very interested." "I'm very interested," he added.

The letter also mentions the possibility of using Federal protection.

VIOLENCE SPREADS IN NORTHERN IRELAND

BELFAST, Northern Ireland - Rioting broke out in Northern Ireland for the first time in weeks, after the peace talks failed last minute.

The violence, which erupted in Derry and Londonderry, followed a breakdown in negotiations between the main political parties in the region. The talks had been aimed at resolving the conflict, which has claimed over 3,500 lives since the late 1960s.

According to police, a group of young men attacked a police station in Derry, causing damage and setting fire to vehicles. In Londonderry, a large crowd rioted in the city center, burning cars and throwing stones.

The violence comes as hopes for a lasting peace in the region appeared to be fading. A series of talks between the main political parties over the past year have been unable to reach a breakthrough.

A resolution critical of the IFM (Inter-Faith Movement) has been introduced in the Northern Ireland Assembly, which is a key body in the region. The resolution called for the movement to be abolished.

Faculty Senate Members To Push Resolution on Declining Salaries

According to data released today, salaries for faculty members at the University of Reading have declined by an average of 4.5% over the past five years.

The Faculty Senate is expected to introduce a resolution at its next meeting demanding that the university take action to address the issue of declining salaries.

The resolution is set to be discussed at a meeting of the university’s senior management later this week. Faculty members have expressed concern over the treatment of faculty members, particularly those in the arts and humanities.

A Arbeitsgemeinschaft der Teilnehmer in der Region Niedersachsen (AGTR) has said it would consider legal action if the university fails to address the issue.

The Difficulties of Finding Housing After the University Year Ends

According to reports, the demand for postgraduate student housing has been extremely high, with many students facing difficulties finding suitable accommodation.

The Student Union has been working closely with local authorities to ensure that students have access to quality accommodation. However, some students have faced difficulties, particularly those who have moved to new cities for their studies.

The university has urged students to start searching for housing as early as possible to avoid any last-minute problems. They have also been advised to contact the Student Union for assistance if they experience any difficulties.

Members Consider Possibilities of Reorganization

Chris H. Sanders

When attending a university, students are often presented with the option to choose between joining a variety of organizations or performing arts groups. At the University of Pennsylvania, the 1984 University Performing Arts Board has attempted to bridge the gap between the two. The board, created in 1982 by the University's Performing Arts Board, is composed of students from various groups, including the University Players, Quadramics, and the Penn Black Players. It meets regularly to discuss the needs and concerns of these groups and to explore ways to improve their operations.

One of the issues currently being discussed is the possibility of reorganizing the groups. Some members of the board believe that a more comprehensive approach to organizing these groups could lead to greater cooperation and resource sharing. Others, however, are concerned that such a move could lead to a loss of autonomy and creativity.

The board has invited representatives from different groups to discuss their perspectives on the issue. These meetings have been productive, and the board hopes to make a decision on the matter in the near future.

In the meantime, the board continues to work on other projects, such as organizing events and providing resources to the groups. The goal is to create a more cohesive and supportive environment for all University performers and artists.
Academic Planning and Budget Advisory

Report: The importance of the Committee's choices, it appears, is that they have a definitive role in the structure of the University. The Committee's recommendation is that the committee shall also have the authority to approve a budget and that the University community is entitled to the same information that is provided to the committee.

Letter to the Editor:

To the Editor:

The University's academic planning and budget advisory committee has some decisions to make about the funding of the academic programs. The committee's recommendations should be taken seriously, as they are the key to ensuring that the University's academic programs are well-funded and have the resources they need to function properly. I am writing to express my support for the committee's recommendations and to urge the University community to pay attention to the decisions that the committee has made. The decisions that the committee has made will have a direct impact on the future of the University, and it is important that we all take an active role in ensuring that the University's academic programs have the resources they need to succeed.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]
Dear Editor:

Mrs. Williams has now acknowledged privately the falseness of the charge that she leveled publicly in her letter to The Daily Pennsylvania/! Thursday. "I have repeatedly asked to discuss these allegations for hours, as on April 18, but you and your staff have refused. I have been informed that I was asked to discuss these allegations further by you and your staff," she wrote to The Daily Pennsylvania/!

While I am pleased that the statement is false, I am less pleased by the way it was made. Mrs. Williams has a long history of refusing to deal with grievances in a reasonable manner, often deferring them to the last minute or to another administrative official. This time she did not put the issue to rest, but instead made a public statement that was misleading and harmful to the University and to the students who are considering coming here. The University board is not a "deciding body" in the University community. Mrs. Williams has the authority to settle grievances, but she has also the responsibility to do so in a fair and impartial manner. If she is not willing to do this, then she should resign.

I am Mrs. Williams's only other spokesperson. If the problems of the University are not resolved, I will be forced to resign. I have done more damage to black students than anyone else. The University's only hope is to elect a new President and Mrs. Williams's resignation. If the University does not change, then I will have to resign as well.

The Penn State system is a large, complex organization with many diverse groups and interests. It is important that all members of the University community work together to resolve any issues that arise.

because it offered an independent study program. "I didn’t want to take any courses, because I already had a bad enough experience with school," he said.

Since graduating from the Fine Arts School in 1974, Berg has been sculpting professionally. "It’s a terrific profession," he said. "I’m not making a lot of money, but I’m doing something for my stage in life. I’m not a waiter." He works not only in bronze (as in the Massa commission but also in alabaster, marble, wood and granite. His subjects are primarily animals and what he called "geometric abstractions.

He explained that his ideas were not usually well-formulated when he begins work on a piece, but rather that they develop as he goes along. "It’s not as if you knew where you were going and you’re so clever that you’ve figured it out and there it is. It’s more like you were trying to figure something out and then something came out of that," he said.

Berg spoke of what he calls the "stone carvers’ conspiracy," that is, his view that stone carving is not as difficult a feat as it is made out to be. "You figure that there have been a million stone carvers - right? — in the history of the world, who’ve been carving reliefs on buildings and doing all kinds of fancy work." He explained, "So it wasn’t that hard it wouldn’t have been considered just some sort of skilled labor." Michelangelo and his cohorts might perhaps turn over were it not for Berg’s next statement: "I think I make exciting forms — that’s hard." "It’s not particularly hard for me," he added.

Does Berg consider himself another Michelangelo? "My work is not directed at all to expanding the vision of art through the centuries. It has no intellectual content like that," he said.

"At first, it was the right thing to do," Becker said. "But our members and staff wouldn't go along. They wanted to keep WXPN going."

"We made a concrete effort to be involved with WXPN," said Siegmund. "But the SAC president is a little too close to WXPN."

Both Bair and Riddle aided the fund requests to WXPN during last year's Spring Fling. "We made the same mistakes," said Siegmund. "But at least we were working our tails off."" }

Toole added that last semester, the committee encountered similar problems with the SAC. He said the committee submitted its projected budget on time, and that the fund requests were working. "The SAC also denied $5,000 to help the Penn Press, a "comparable" organization to WBNP, reached over 100 members and requested $500, while WBNP had 15 student members and requested $1,000."

A zero recommendation makes a zero request," he said. "It's no longer a move to close WXPN," said Riddle. "It's more a move to close WBNP."

"Thrilled is the word for Fran Walker," said Toole. "He's the only board member to vote against WXPN."

"It makes the budget very, very clear," Toole said. "If we were working our tails off, we should be doing the same thing."

SAC Members—

The Spring Fling Committee Co-Chair Terry Laut called the committee's decision to close WXPN "an irresponsible State-System program." He said the SAC has "a chance of getting a bond in presentations as small as 1.5 and others are," he said. "The sound in the Palmera was too bad in the Spring Fling Committee and it was worse."

The committee's chance is a box, he said.

Spring Fling Committee Co-Chair Terry Laut called the committee's decision to close WXPN "an irresponsible State-System program."

After last year's controversy, Sean Caslin said his group was "appointed."

"I don't think they're doing anything," he said. "It's not like they're getting more responsible than past boards."

"They're just learning how to do it better," said Caslin. "I think they're just learning how to make mistakes."

Laxwomen Slow Against F&M, 10-4

By KAREN WOODRUFF

A day after a big win, the College of Wooster team was still feeling the effects of their Laser heart attack. It's been a week of contrasts for the women's lacrosse team. On Saturday, there was the quick-paced action of the artificial surface of Franklin Field, where Yale became the victim of 15-5 loss. For Pennsylvania, it was a sweet.

Yesterday, the Laserwomen traveled to the home of Franklin and Marshall, where Pennsylvania once again came out victorious. The difference was in the slow pace of the game and what could have been. When trays were away, all once again fell into place. There were many small changes that happened in the Laserwomen's style of play. Nearly, an hour earlier, Julia Heller wanted to prove a point that they were not going to give up.

"I think that we put in our best performance," said Julie Heller, who scored one goal. "We just passed it through us, and we played well enough to be successful. The offense really stepped up and played at its highest level."

"I think that we pushed it to our best performance."

"I think we put in our best performance," said Julie Heller, who scored one goal. "On our team, you can pass and you want to get it all. But we decided to stop and reassess what we could do."

Pickup may be the key to a winning baseball club in the long run, but it was the fourth-inning home run that truly elevated the Peabody La Salle players (12-13-1) to aTextInput...
Brownell Ahead In Heptathlon

By KEVIN ROSENTHAL

In the second day of Penn Relays competition, Zagat’s Susan Brownell was nearly unbeatable as she won the heptathlon with a score of 6,065 points, which included a high jump of 5.77 meters, a long jump of 7.09 meters, a hurdles race of 24.4 seconds, a 100-meter dash in 11.66 seconds, and a 800-meter run in 2:13.92. Brownell’s score was 17 points better than the second-place finisher, Debra Jones of Texas A&M, who had a score of 6,048 points. Brownell’s performance was a record-breaking effort, as she surpassed the previous record of 6,008 points set by Mary Decker in 1980.

Brownell’s performance was a testament to her dedication and hard work, as she had been training for this event for several months. She had set a personal best in the high jump, and had also improved her times in the 100-meter dash and the 800-meter run. Her coach, John Cheesborough, had been impressed with Brownell’s performance, as he said, “I’m very pleased with her performance today. She has been working very hard and it shows.”

In addition to Brownell, other Penn athletes also performed well in the heptathlon, as they had several personal bests during the event. Debra Jones of Texas A&M finished second with a score of 6,048 points, while Debra Jones of Texas A&M finished second with a score of 6,048 points, while Mary Decker of Florida finished third with a score of 6,008 points.

The heptathlon is a combination of seven events, including the 100-meter dash, the long jump, the high jump, the hurdles race, the 800-meter run, and two track events. The events are run in a specific order, with the first event being the hurdles race, followed by the 100-meter dash, the long jump, the high jump, the hurdles race, the 800-meter run, and the final track event.

Relays Means Different Things To Different Penn Track People
