U.Acts To Save Lit Bros. Store Demolition Halt Proposed

By PETER CAPLES

The renovation project was not the last move to prevent the demolition of Philadelphia's Lit Brothers department store.
A new architectural and urban planning market study, which has been conducted since 1960, shows that the Lit Brothers store is the most valuable building in the City of Philadelphia.

The store is situated on the site of the former Lit Brothers building and is owned by a development corporation.

The corporation plans to demolish the building to make way for a new store.

In an attempt to prevent the demolition, a group of concerned citizens has filed a petition with the city council asking that the building be preserved.

The petition has been filed by a group of citizens who are concerned about the preservation of the building.

They claim that the building is a valuable part of Philadelphia's history and should be preserved.

The citizens have also claimed that the building is an important landmark in the city.

The council will hold a meeting to discuss the petition and the future of the building.

Admissions To Make

By ANDREW KREPSZ

The admissions office's efforts to increase diversity among its student population have been successful.

This year, the admissions office has increased the number of students from other areas of the country.

The office has also increased its focus on students who are minorities or come from economically disadvantaged backgrounds.

The admissions office has also increased its efforts to attract students from underrepresented groups.

The office has increased its outreach to these groups
by sending out brochures and hosting informational sessions.

Byrd, Jones Blast Reagan Defense Plan

WASHINGTON — The chairman of the Senate Budget Committee and a leading Democrat on the Armed Services Committee are charging that the Reagan administration is spending too much on defense and too little on domestic programs.

Sens. Byrd and Jones blasted the administration's defense budget which will be released today.

Byrd, a West Virginia Democrat, said the administration's approach was "like throwing money in a hole." He said the administration was spending too much on defense by not putting a dollar in the hole. He said that the administration was spending too much on defense by not putting a dollar in the hole.

Jones, a Texas Republican who is a strong proponent of the administration's defense programs, said the administration was spending too much on defense by not putting a dollar in the hole.

Sixties Nostalgia Without Drugs

To the Editor:

As a casual reader of "Sixties Nostalgia Without Drugs," I would like to express my disagreement with the author. While the article acknowledges the positive aspects of the 1960s, it fails to address the negative consequences, particularly the widespread drug use that plagued the decade.

The author argues that the 1960s were a time of experimentation and exploration, but it's important to recognize that this came at a cost. Drug use during that period played a significant role in the decline of society, economic instability, and health issues.

Additionally, the author mentions the value of the music and arts of the time, but it's crucial to examine these in the context of the cultural and political climate. The counterculture movement often supported drug use as a means of rebelling against mainstream society.

In conclusion, while it's commendable to reflect on the positive aspects of the 1960s, we must also acknowledge the negative consequences, particularly the impact of drug use on individuals and society. It's important to learn from history to avoid repeating the mistakes of the past.

Sincerely,
