News In Brief

Millions Vote in Egyptian Referendum

CAIRO, Egypt—Millions of Egyptians, domingo, voted to support new constitutional changes that would allow President Hosni Mubarak to run for a sixth term. The referendum, which was organized by the ruling National Democratic Party, was hailed by Mubarak as a vote of confidence in his leadership and his plans for modernizing the country.

The vote was expected to be aoggler, with low turnout and a large number of abstentions. The opposition called the referendum a sham and accused the government of rigging the results.

The referendum was met with widespread criticism from human rights groups and international organizations, who called for a boycott and expressed concern about the fairness of the vote. Nevertheless, the government went ahead with the referendum, saying it was necessary to secure the stability and development of the country.

The results of the referendum are expected to be announced within the next few days. The government has already made it clear that it will implement the referendum's outcomes, which may include changes to the constitution to allow Mubarak to run for another term.

I have often had difficulty envisioning George Washington boldly leading an army. So when I was asked to contribute an article on presidents, I thought about the job of the president today: how much time they spend running two of their cherry tree misadventures... or on Israel. We need Egypt as a bridge and must facilitate the emergence of that role by encouraging Egyptian-Saudi contacts. More importantly, we must make it obvious that talking with Israelis, rather than shooting at them, pays the greatest dividends

Cheating

The 'Magida Method'

Without further ado, behold the Magic Method (If you have the name of the god it could refer to). There are a lot of good things you can do while cheating on a test: it is the type of one in which you can get an arm and leg in return. (There are disputes) but, basically, you must be prepared for the test on the day that you take it. You will need at least one pot of coffee and, if possible, a friend who has read the text. How does the Magida Method work? First, you must have the test of your choice. Pick up bluebooks, and copy the test. If you have a friend, ask them to copy the test and fill in the rest of the test for you. If you do not have a friend, you can do the test on your own. Then, when you are finished with the test, you can use a shredder to shred the test. This method is good for almost any test — just use your imagination and adapt it to your own situation. After the publication and submission of this article, I do not know if the method will work.

Step 2: It is a second bluebook, begins a letter to your mother, starting along the line:

Just used the hell out of my favorite method — space of late — and have only one left. Do you have any tests tomorrow? Complete the letter, and send it to your mother.

Step 3: Do not use the test, with any of your friends. Remember, this is your test, and it is your responsibility to keep it safe.

Step 4: Call the tests in the test, and send it to your mother.

Step 5: This bluebook, promptly shredded.

The Common Cold

By Dr. Samuel Fager

There is never a time in the year when the common cold does not attack millions of people. The common cold is caused by viruses. No, it is not a matter of having two of your cherry tree misadventures. It is caused by viruses in the nose and throat called rhinoviruses. These viruses can cause a runny nose, sneezing, and in some cases a sore throat. This cold is not caused by bacteria.

The common cold is most often caused by viruses that live in the nose and throat. This cold is not caused by bacteria.

The death of Anwar al Sadat, tragic yet inevitable, caused by bacteria are three of the most common problems.
Chairman Ludwig—
received great praise for his handling of the amendment. "I think Steve is someone GAPSA needs right now," he said. "He's an incredibly dedicated, hard-working person." GAPSA Vice-Chairman Jodi Schwartz added on Monday. "He has given up a lot to try and make the University a better place. I'm really excited about him being chair. He's wonderful."
Grad Student Associations Council Chairman Ellen Zweig added, "I think Steve is someone GAPSA needs right now. He understands the spirit of GAPSA as a federation.
Ludwig sees several goals for himself in his role as GAPSA leader. "First I want to see the building of GAPSA as an organization," he said. "This includes getting a guaranteed source of funding, getting an office, and just getting GAPSA members more aware of what's going on in the University."
He also plans to work with GSAC in examining TA compensation and career placement, which he called "perennial student concerns."
Ludwig also expressed concern over affirmative action issues. "I think the greatest thing GAPSA has ever done was the formation of the University-wide committee on racism," he said. "Despite this, GAPSA has not issued a statement on the denial of tenure to Law Professor Ralph Smith."
"I think that this is because of a belief that no matter what we say or do, it is going to influence the Law School faculty," Ludwig said. "It is a question of self-preservation."
"But certainly I'm deeply concerned about the issue, and I hope he gets tenure," he added.
Faculty Senate Chairman Phoebe Leboy praised Ludwig last week as "very knowledgeable," and said he has a "fine sensitivity to the issues and problems of the University."
And other student leaders, including UA Chairman Liz Cooper, describe Ludwig as "a dynamic leader."
"When Steve is concerned about an issue — and that's almost every issue — he will thoroughly research the issue and seriously think about his stance," Cooper said Monday.
Ludwig, who lives in a spacious two-room single on Van Pelt's third floor, calls the house's residents "incredibly talented," and its faculty members "really neat."
Van Pelt House Chairman Christine Malone described Ludwig as "in one word — great!" She added, "The best thing about him is that when something needs to be done, you take it to Steve, and it's done."
"He gets along with the undergraduates, and they get along with him," Van Pelt resident Bruce Barnes added. "He's really an asset to the house."
Ludwig said he does not believe he is attempting the impossible by juggling his GAPSA, Van Pelt and Law School. "I really think if one student wants to make changes in the University, they can do it," he said. "As long as what they are for is semirational, I think they can do it."

CANDIDATES' STATEMENTS:

1. Kathie Huyett, Hargadon

"This is a time of change and transition at Penn. I believe that the students of Penn should be part of the decision making process. If not, we will continue to see a lack of communication between our students and the administration of this university. As a candidate for the Undergraduate Assembly, I will represent the students and their ideas to the administration of the university. I believe that the students should have a say in what happens on this campus and that they should be represented by their own representatives. I look forward to working with you all and representing your ideas."

2. Lauren Powell

"As a member of the Student Voice, I have seen the importance of having students represented in the decision making process. As a candidate for the UA, I will work to ensure that the students' voices are heard."

Antonio Callado
Author Discusses the Literature of Brazil

By ROY MILLER
Callado, professor of Romance literature at the University of Pennsylvania and a noted critic, spoke at the second annual lecture in the Tinker Lectures in the Humanities. Callado, who hails from Brazil, spoke about his country's literature, particularly about his nation's recent novel, "Sempreviva," which he translated into English.

Callado said that Brazilian literature has seen a rise in popularity in recent years. He cited "Sempreviva" as an example of this trend, noting that it has been translated into several languages, including English. Callado also spoke about the connection between literature and film, saying that "Sempreviva" was adapted into a movie that was a box office success.

Callado discussed the evolution of literature in Brazil, from the early works of Machado de Assis to the contemporary works of writers like Paulo Coelho. He pointed out that Brazilian literature has a unique voice that is distinct from other Latin American literature.

Callado also spoke about the influence of literature on society in Brazil. He said that literature is used as a means of distributing income, and that it has been successful in alleviating poverty.

Callado concluded his lecture by saying that literature is a powerful tool for change, and that it has the potential to make a positive impact on society. He urged students to read and appreciate literature from different cultures, and to use it as a means of understanding and connecting with the world around them.

In addition to his work as a writer, Callado is also a professor of English at the University of Pennsylvania. He has written several books on Brazilian literature and has been a contributor to various literary journals.

Callado's lecture was the first in the second year of the Tinker Lectures in the Humanities. The series is designed to bring together people of different disciplines to discuss a common theme. This year's series of talks will cover the topic of literature and its role in society.

The lecture was well-received by the audience, who gave Callado a standing ovation at the end. Callado was pleased with the response and said he looks forward to participating in future lectures in the series.

Pennsylvania senior Vincent Ross, a member of the spring basketball squad for the past three seasons, has taken an official leave of absence from the University for the fall semester. It was announced recently that the team’s leading scorer for the past three seasons was suspended indefinitely by head coach Bob Weinhauer.

The announcement comes in the wake of Weinhauer’s suspension of Ross for two games for violating certain academic regulations. Ross’s team-high 19 points in the 71-64 win over Bucknell on November 6 was the last time he played at the college level.

Ross, a senior guard from Pittston, Pa., is a two-time All-Ivy selection and the Atlantic10 second-teamer.

The program’s leading scorer and rebounder, Ross was second only to teammate Steve Bilsky in minutes played for the season. Ross averaged 12.9 points and 6.0 rebounds per game in his four-year career. He is the only player in the Ivy League to score at least 1,000 points and grab 500 rebounds in his career.

Ross was suspended for two games after violating an academic rule that he had violated in the past.

“His suspension was not a question of whether he violated the rule,” said Weinhauer. “It was a question of whether he would comply with the rule.”

Ross is the son of Bob and Barbara Ross, who both attended the University of Pennsylvania. Ross’s father is a former basketball player at the University and his mother played field hockey.

Ross has completed all of his coursework for the fall semester and will return to campus in the spring.

Weinhauer is the sixth coach in the history of the Quakers basketball team.
