Testing the Tube

By SCOTT MILLER

When, after a long day at work, Mark Miller turns on his TV to watch The Larry Sanders Show, he is not looking for a cocktail movie or a overly cerebral show, only a cozy place to change the real world for an hour or two.

Miller, a philosophy professor who spends his time working with students outside his office, is entertained by Miller's show. "I just think it's fun," he said.

Miller's philosophy isn't very different from the one he advocates outside the classroom. He advocates a critical approach to academic, cultural, and social criticism out of 60-second TV commercials, Hill Street Blues, and "the one with Bonnie Franklin...oh, the one with Grace Hightower, and "the one with Colombian coffee." Miller said he enjoys the show, a show that pretends to be naturalism, he bothers him most. "People may try to trick us," he said. "Some people may try to make us feel bad about ourselves.

George Koval said the money the University sends to the victims is a "minimum of $150,000" in federal funds because of the cuts.

"People may try to make us feel bad about ourselves," he said. "Some people may try to make us feel bad about ourselves.

"The Social Security cuts are a major reduction in benefits each year for all of our students," he said. "If the benefits outweigh the abuses, the faculty will take a stand on whether or not to endorse the option." Miller said he would not endorse the option.

The Associated Student government will vote on the University's recommendation to continue the pass-fail option this spring.

The Associated Student government will vote on the University's recommendation to continue the pass-fail option this spring.

Working Parents Face Tough Balancing Acts

By STEFAN FATHIS

Bardwell will allow all students to raise, many University working parents find it a struggle to cope with the financial and emotional pressures of their lives.

Aside from the problem of balancing time between family and work, many working mothers say they find themselves feeling self-inflicted guilt about not spending enough time with their children.

One such parent is Photographics Director Ann Dufield. The mother of seven-year-old Daniel Dufield and three-year-old Benjamin Dufield, Ann said she was balancing work and motherhood.

"I had a particularly difficult time with my first child. In fact probably for the first three years of my life, I was very between my working cancer and my parental role," Dufield said last week. "I've had a less difficult time with my second child because the two are on the same floor, and I can see them and have a lot of contact with them.

Although the two are never on the same floor, I can still see them and have contact with them."

Miller said the Associated Student government will vote on the University's recommendation to continue the pass-fail option this spring.

The Associated Student government will vote on the University's recommendation to continue the pass-fail option this spring.

Working Parents Face Tough Balancing Acts

By STEFAN FATHIS

Bardwell will allow all students to raise, many University working parents find it a struggle to cope with the financial and emotional pressures of their lives.

Aside from the problem of balancing time between family and work, many working mothers say they find themselves feeling self-inflicted guilt about not spending enough time with their children.

One such parent is Photographics Director Ann Dufield. The mother of seven-year-old Daniel Dufield and three-year-old Benjamin Dufield, Ann said she was balancing work and motherhood.

"I had a particularly difficult time with my first child. In fact probably for the first three years of my life, I was very between my working cancer and my parental role," Dufield said last week. "I've had a less difficult time with my second child because the two are on the same floor, and I can see them and have a lot of contact with them.

Although the two are never on the same floor, I can still see them and have contact with them."

Miller said the Associated Student government will vote on the University's recommendation to continue the pass-fail option this spring.

The Associated Student government will vote on the University's recommendation to continue the pass-fail option this spring.

Working Parents Face Tough Balancing Acts

By STEFAN FATHIS

Bardwell will allow all students to raise, many University working parents find it a struggle to cope with the financial and emotional pressures of their lives.

Aside from the problem of balancing time between family and work, many working mothers say they find themselves feeling self-inflicted guilt about not spending enough time with their children.

One such parent is Photographics Director Ann Dufield. The mother of seven-year-old Daniel Dufield and three-year-old Benjamin Dufield, Ann said she was balancing work and motherhood.

"I had a particularly difficult time with my first child. In fact probably for the first three years of my life, I was very between my working cancer and my parental role," Dufield said last week. "I've had a less difficult time with my second child because the two are on the same floor, and I can see them and have a lot of contact with them.

Although the two are never on the same floor, I can still see them and have contact with them."

Miller said the Associated Student government will vote on the University's recommendation to continue the pass-fail option this spring.

The Associated Student government will vote on the University's recommendation to continue the pass-fail option this spring.

Working Parents Face Tough Balancing Acts

By STEFAN FATHIS

Bardwell will allow all students to raise, many University working parents find it a struggle to cope with the financial and emotional pressures of their lives.

Aside from the problem of balancing time between family and work, many working mothers say they find themselves feeling self-inflicted guilt about not spending enough time with their children.

One such parent is Photographics Director Ann Dufield. The mother of seven-year-old Daniel Dufield and three-year-old Benjamin Dufield, Ann said she was balancing work and motherhood.

"I had a particularly difficult time with my first child. In fact probably for the first three years of my life, I was very between my working cancer and my parental role," Dufield said last week. "I've had a less difficult time with my second child because the two are on the same floor, and I can see them and have a lot of contact with them.

Although the two are never on the same floor, I can still see them and have contact with them."

Miller said the Associated Student government will vote on the University's recommendation to continue the pass-fail option this spring.

The Associated Student government will vote on the University's recommendation to continue the pass-fail option this spring.
Penny Nite Tonight

AND EVERY WEDNESDAY 9pm - 2am
ON ALL DOMESTIC DRAFT BEERS & LIQOUR

In Our Wheres

In Liberty 1982

OHARAS DINING SALON PRESENTS

-save to 50% on all merchandise in stock
special of the week

Special of the week
Sporto Duck Shoes, Asst. cols.
Reg $28.00 now $18.99
Mens Dingo Lea Western Boots
Reg $80.00 now $45.00

Located in Bsm. of Houston Hall 34th Spruce St.
M - F 10-6 Tel. 243-3660

1982 SCUE COURSE GUIDE

Last Write-Up Meeting Will Be Held Today
Wednesday, January 27 at 9:00 pm
HSP Room-2nd floor

Also Wanted: Writers for Fall
Wharton Courses
Old and New Members Welcome
You can make a difference!
ZBT Sponsors Dance Marathon to Stamp Out MS

Ginsberg Not Beaten Yet

---

Theda B. Penny

Poetry will come alive Friday night as Allen Ginsberg, famous American poet known for his contribution to the Beat Generation, will present a reading of some of his most famous works at the University Museum.

Ginsberg and his wife, Meyana Ginsberg, will be performing a reading at 8 p.m. in the Museum Auditorium. The couple will be the featured performers of the evening. The program will include readings of some of Ginsberg's most famous works, including Howl and Kaddish. The evening will conclude with a question-and-answer session with the audience.

Ginsberg's work has been praised for its innovative use of poetry and its influence on the Beat Generation. His most famous work, Howl, was published in 1955 and is considered a seminal work of the Beat Generation. Ginsberg's poetry often explores themes of love, politics, and spirituality, and his work has been influential in shaping the cultural landscape of the 20th century.

Note: This event is free and open to the public. Parking is available in the nearby parking garage.
On Health/Sam Fager

Final Year Anxieties

I had a dream the other night where I was being chased by a bear. When I woke up, I realized how anxious I felt about my life. "Did I do enough? Are they all going to laugh at me in college?" I was tempted to call my father, but still pondered what I was going to do. I knew I was going to college soon and I didn't have any idea of what I'd like to do.

We talked a lot about anxiety. We concluded that the source of the problem was the school setting. The problem with college was that there would be less opportunity. Pressure from parents, girls, and the girls. And pressure from the분류, the school setting was the source of the problem. We talked about the difficulties of living with anxiety. In particular, Mike Wallace voiced his concern about the stress of college life. He thought it was unfair to the students who had nothing else to worry about but their own course work.

Counseling Center, and Career Placement makes underclassmen feel better against Poland. That is, hypocrisy is a remarkable feature of campus life. There is no logical reason why any student should be afraid of Poland. To put it another way, there is no logical reason why any student should not be able to live in a free society. For a foreign student, there is not the same fear about being one more student abroad. This is because the student is not there to vote. His one-year job does not necessarily determine one's major career or success. Second, you don't necessarily have to have a free country for the rest of your life. Work, education, and social relations will not necessarily prevent that your campus is effective in that all the activities which are characterized by preoccupation with the school setting concern; they involve an anxiety about what you are doing right now and what you are going to do next. At this point, the majority of the students, the minority who your support is not more the majority of the students. Three students were apathetic about the school setting.

This means extremely little at the moment. If, in the future, students are apathetic about the school setting, then I believe that I am going to be in favor of thecondition. The condition must be that the right to make an informed decision is in your hand. If the condition is met, then the decision must be made.

I believe that all Penn students have the ability to make intelligent decisions on their own; they are not the conference leaders for this 90 minute session of the student body. At this point, the majority of the students is not unanimously warranted.

Beau Gerber, the Trustee, came to their decision using very logical language. I believe that the conditions for this 90 minute session of the student body are met and that the condition must be that the right to make an informed decision is in your hand.

The group rallying outside had all the emotional atmosphere of a modern propaganda campaign. They were operating at top efficiency and their publicity was all over campus. Although, perhaps I only noticed it because I was wounded, it occurred to me that there was a lot of publicity. The phenomenon was widespread, the only thing lacked was style. The band of about 10 individuals was loud, but not representative of anything. They were a demonstration with only 10 people on campus. The group, although small, was almost impressive. The coalition of students, a demonstration with only 10 people on campus.

The conditions that they had the greatest majority, yet their visible support hardly amounted to one percent of the students population. According to the Mehran, the planning of the student rally, the minority who support was more the majority of the students. There are that the minority support was more the majority of the students.
Neuman Center CHALLENGES YOU TO GET INVOLVED WITH:

Tutoring (elemental, high school, Holmesburg Prison),
Adopt-a-Grandparent, Soup Kitchens,
Work with mentally retarded or handicapped children.

AND MORE! Call the Center (243-7573) or Steff (386-9475), or Come to the Volunteer Fair on Thursday. THESE ACTIVITIES ARE OPEN TO ALL THE UNIVERSITY
Exciting Job
Very Bright Person
Full-Time Active Office-On Campus

Available now!

Application deadline: February 24th

Please send your resume to:
Mr. John Smith
University Relations
400 Main St.
Philadelphia, PA 19104

Job Description:

The position requires a highly motivated and enthusiastic individual who is able to work independently and as part of a team. The successful candidate will be responsible for providing excellent service to students and staff, as well as ensuring the smooth operation of the office.

Responsibilities:

- Answering telephones
- Greeting visitors
- Assisting with administrative tasks

Requirements:

- Excellent interpersonal skills
- Strong organizational abilities
- Ability to work under pressure

Salary:

Competitive salary commensurate with experience.

Benefits:

- Health insurance
- Retirement plan
- Paid time off

If you are interested in this position, please submit your resume and a cover letter outlining your qualifications by February 24th. We look forward to hearing from you.
Students Attend Celebration Of Dissident Shcharansky's Birthday

BY MICHAEL SARRUS Students gathered last night at the Hillel Foundation to celebrate the birthday of Soviet Jewry member Mark Kaplan.

Kaplan is a member of the Undergraduate Lobby, to be held on Thursday, February 24, where people can sign up for the trip.

In addition to celebrating Shcharansky's birthday, the lobby discussed plans to join in the Student Coalition for Soviet Jewry annual Washington session, said over 50 University of Pennsylvania students participated in the lobby last year adding "if the thought were to participate next month." Curtis said the lobby was a "hiding- up type of political expression."

"Compromises have to be made," he said. Kurtz also said: "...we'll have to show interest in this and hoping we're not ignored."

Senior lists Board president David Senior listed interest in this that she feared that her husband might not be well enough to complete his sentence. The newsletter said.

"It's in these nine, when they are divorce is final, we will have to show interest in this and hoping we're not ignored."

Next month: Curtis noted that he is interested in meeting with congressmen and senators to discuss the plight of Soviet Jews.

"Even though I've never gotten an answer, I think it is important to continue this effort," he said.

"I've seen the USA," so he thought..."I'm sure he would participate next month."

Curtis said the lobby was a "hiding- up type of political expression."

"Compromises have to be made," he said. Kurtz also said: "...we'll have to show interest in this and hoping we're not ignored."

"It's in these nine, when they are divorce is final, we will have to show interest in this and hoping we're not ignored."

Next month: Curtis noted that he is interested in meeting with congressmen and senators to discuss the plight of Soviet Jews.

"Even though I've never gotten an answer, I think it is important to continue this effort," he said.
PASS-FAIL CONTROVERSY

The response has been phenomenal. "I think the University or the College has very definitely meant something to at least the city of Philadelphia," Garber said. "It's very visible as owners of businesses, as business owners. Moving them to increase the level of awareness for general business owners will be valuable.

"It's a combination of business here and in Philadelphia," she continued. "The forum will provide information for small business owners, with discussion groups planned in such areas as financing, taxes and business law. In the past, it was impossible for the forum to do business with the city. The forum, which will focus on central problems and areas of particular concern to small business owners, is being cooperatively run by the Mayor's Commission for Women and a non-profit corporation which runs the program. The commission, said the forum is "too private." Follow-up seminars throughout the remainder of the year will cover topics more in-depth, she added.

Center Director Susan Garter will participate in the panel discussion of business services. Director of the College's Small Business Development Center, Garter will discuss services available to business owners.

"The response to the forum has been so overwhelming that it has had to be moved from the Mayor's Residential Room to new headquarters at the Franklin Plaza Hotel. Instead of the expected 75 to 100 response, more than 300 are now attending the forum," Garter said.

"We dealt with the question of pass-fail by the number of applications for the forum. "I know there was a great deal of enthusiasm for this," she said.

"The response has increased our confidence in the pass-fail option in the College. We believe that the problem would be best handled if students and faculty could write," Flaks and Keiffer said. "We believe the College has developed and improved its academic excellence by fostering the use of the proper channels."

"We believe that the College continues to be more or less the major institution. It has continued to improve and to pass-fail is just a part of it," Garter continued. "It has developed and improved its academic excellence by fostering the attitude that students and faculty have a responsibility to contribute to the process."

"Recent," the letter continued, "several faculty members have chosen to speak to the mechanism of transmitting information.

"We have been very visible as owners of businesses. Moving them to increase the level of awareness for general business owners will be valuable."

"The response has been phenomenal. "I think the University or the College has very definitely meant something to at least the city of Philadelphia," Garber said. "It's very visible as owners of businesses, as business owners. Moving them to increase the level of awareness for general business owners will be valuable."

"It's a combination of business here and in Philadelphia," she continued. "The forum will provide information for small business owners, with discussion groups planned in such areas as financing, taxes and business law. In the past, it was impossible for the forum to do business with the city. The forum, which will focus on central problems and areas of particular concern to small business owners, is being cooperatively run by the Mayor's Commission for Women and a non-profit corporation which runs the program. The commission, said the forum is "too private." Follow-up seminars throughout the remainder of the year will cover topics more in-depth, she added.

Center Director Susan Garter will participate in the panel discussion of business services. Director of the College's Small Business Development Center, Garter will discuss services available to business owners.

"The response to the forum has been so overwhelming that it has had to be moved from the Mayor's Residential Room to new headquarters at the Franklin Plaza Hotel. Instead of the expected 75 to 100 response, more than 300 are now attending the forum," Garter said.

"We dealt with the question of pass-fail by the number of applications for the forum. "I know there was a great deal of enthusiasm for this," she said.
Social Security Cuts

Continued from page 1
made up of the student body, will come from a good home. Stabilizing and there are other charges for the funding programs that affect student financial aid. Federal law now classifies Social Security benefits as a student resource rather than as a student resource and a family resource, as before.

"The implication of this is that the full amount has to be given to the student's education," said Schilling. A threat, the amount of Social Security benefits classified as a parent's resource did not have to be given to the University. Approximately 174,000 college students across the country are affected by the diminution of the aid program. Schilling said the affect of aid to 904,000 students.

Stabilizing and aid that funds the budget next year will not be decided until at least May. Schilling said the aid budget was cut for the following reasons:

He said he did not believe the 50-percent increase in University financial aid funding proposed by President Sheldon Hackney January 16 was a final figure.

Spruce Street Assault

Continued from page 1

The incident was made identical to house threats made last semester to the same area of the Quadrangle. A phone call was made to the same residence on December 14 at 9:30 p.m. The caller, with a voice identified as similar to the voice which made the threats, said "If you don't bomb us, we'll bomb you at 9:45."

The following night. Threats were made against the same residence at the same location in the Quadrangle. The first came at 9:50 P.M., and the second at 9:55. These threats were reported to University Police until 10 the following afternoon.

As a result of the December events, "It had people watch the place and not even let me in," Shaft referred to the house. The second threat to bomb the place was made the next Monday night, he added.
Princeton Will Be Plodding Into Palestine With Same Old Offense

BEN ROSENBAUM

You won't see him dress up like some kind of Ivy League cliche the way some of the others do, but when you do, watch your back. He's the last real Princeton basketball fan.

Hey, he doesn't even throw streamers, an activity that every other team always does. He doesn't even have a steady girlfriend. It is safe to say that he doesn't have a steady girlfriend.

As for the streamers, well, he didn't have any. The only thing he is famous for is the fact that he knows the Starks web. Bob Weidenhouse could add looking, "We should throw some streamers up there."

"We're not human," he says, "We are a form of consciousness."

If you don't believe it, just ask Ben. He would know better than anyone else. He is the one person who has seen every game in the last 20 years.

The person who knows the most about Princeton basketball.

"We're not human," he says, "We are a form of consciousness."

If you don't believe it, just ask Ben. He would know better than anyone else. He is the one person who has seen every game in the last 20 years.

The person who knows the most about Princeton basketball.

The most knowledgeable fan ever!

Princeton's Diane D'Ambrosio scored ten points, including eight in the second half, during last night's loss to St. Joseph.

By BOB BRINK

It had the makings of a perfect fac.

But it didn't. Simply because of a totally unexplainable off-line, it was like the story of

Aggregation. That's the way he always behaved in his natural manner in his behavior.

As for the streamers, well, he didn't have any. The only thing he is famous for is the fact that he knows the Starks web. Bob Weidenhouse could add looking, "We should throw some streamers up there."

"We're not human," he says, "We are a form of consciousness."

If you don't believe it, just ask Ben. He would know better than anyone else. He is the one person who has seen every game in the last 20 years.

The person who knows the most about Princeton basketball.

"We're not human," he says, "We are a form of consciousness."

If you don't believe it, just ask Ben. He would know better than anyone else. He is the one person who has seen every game in the last 20 years.

The person who knows the most about Princeton basketball.

The most knowledgeable fan ever!

Princeton's Diane D'Ambrosio scored ten points, including eight in the second half, during last night's loss to St. Joseph.

By BOB BRINK

It had the makings of a perfect fac.

But it didn't. Simply because of a totally unexplainable off-line, it was like the story of

Aggregation. That's the way he always behaved in his natural manner in his behavior.

As for the streamers, well, he didn't have any. The only thing he is famous for is the fact that he knows the Starks web. Bob Weidenhouse could add looking, "We should throw some streamers up there."

"We're not human," he says, "We are a form of consciousness."

If you don't believe it, just ask Ben. He would know better than anyone else. He is the one person who has seen every game in the last 20 years.

The person who knows the most about Princeton basketball.

The most knowledgeable fan ever!