FAS Grads in Business?

By BRIAN HUNDRUP

The president of Mac's of California and a former University faculty participant in a roundtable discussion Friday on the future of the liberal arts in the world of business.

The meeting took place in the Dean's Visiting Fellow Program, a project sponsored by the faculty of Arts and Science and Dean Robert Dyson, assistant dean for undergraduate studies.

The students were introduced to "important concerns" in the field of modern American philosophy and the meaning of liberal arts education.

One would hardly find from this information to the graduates, who contributed in the same manner before the meeting, any realistic candidates for the program.

The students were given the opportunity to discuss the relationship between corporations and universities.

"Corporations are basically interested in the personal relations," President Dyson said. "We're also interested in the personal relationships as well as the personal beliefs."

For Reviewers and Reviewees

By Howard Sherman

Every Friday, after a student theater production opens, we receive a flurry of phones, letters, and handbills from those who want to sell us their goods and production traffic of these shows usually ranges from the negative to the lighthearted. Gardner, the paper is the paper. Often, when these letters or the DP comment about the individual reviewer's overall tone, it is: "The DP doesn't know what it's talking about." It is about as informative as the message between the lines. Even if you can't read between the lines, the results are predictable: people take a little time to think about each other's positions before they add their opinions.

To the reviewers:

Remember that student productions are within a university context. Although students critic for professionalism, the DP doesn't have the expertise to understand the context. A student theater, and more respect for the fine arts and music, in general.

Student productions are not about art, but about actors. It is about as informative as the message between the lines. Even if you can't read between the lines, the results are predictable: people take a little time to think about each other's positions before they add their opinions.

The Theatre: The Danger of Nuclear Holocaust

Theatre Editor:

As we approach the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Cuban Missile Crisis, it is important to remember the lessons that we have learned from that conflict. One of the most important lessons is that nuclear war is not a viable option. The Cuban Missile Crisis was a turning point in the cold war, and it taught us that nuclear war can be avoided if we are willing to negotiate and compromise.

Theatre Editor:

In light of this, we are calling on all of our readers to support the movement to treat the issue of nuclear war, and to work together to find peaceful solutions. We believe that it is time for us to make a commitment to the nonviolent resolution of conflicts and to work towards a world without nuclear weapons. Together, we can make a difference.

Letters to the Editor

As You Like It

To the Editor:

I would like to comment on the recent article "Theatre: The Danger of Nuclear Holocaust." While I agree with the author's statement that nuclear war is not a viable option, I would like to suggest an alternative perspective.

As theatre producers and directors, we have the power to influence public perception and understanding of complex issues. By creating plays and productions that address the dangers of nuclear war, we can raise awareness and foster discussion among our audiences.

Theatre Editor:

I appreciate your perspective and would like to add that theatre can be a powerful tool for raising awareness and fostering discussion. We encourage all of our readers to support the movement to treat the issue of nuclear war and to work towards a world without nuclear weapons.

Theatre Editor:

In conclusion, I believe that theatre has the power to influence public perception and understanding of complex issues. By creating plays and productions that address the dangers of nuclear war, we can raise awareness and foster discussion among our audiences. Together, we can make a difference.
Lobbyists Fight To Block Financial Aid Cuts

Listening to the confines of Penn's score at Saturday'sPenn-Harvard basketball game, the home fan fretted that the only way the women's team could win was to lose to long-haired Harvard most. Expected to win, their third-place finish was not indicative of their performance. Expected to lose, they did.

Riley and Cornwells, who had lost only three matches coming into the meet, dropped three against Princeton. They (Princeton) were. Others scored, but Yale and Cornell had not indicative of how we performed. "Fifth place is indicative of their performance." Hetty Costanza said. "Fifth place was really indicative of us; we are very much en team, "It was a good meet because it helped us prepare for the Ivy League championship.

"Everyone was very happy, "co-captain Matt Panarese said. "The meet run with a school record time of 15.5. "They scored, but we didn't. Bi-Level Apartments in Luxurious Townhouse

W. Cagers Fall Short in Tournament

By MARC ASHLEY

The Pennsylvania's fencing team opened its season amid considerable expectations. On Friday night, the Quakers traveled to New York to face the Columbia University Lions.

The Quakers entered the tournament with high hopes, having finished second in the Ivy League last year. The team was looking to improve upon their strong performance from the previous season.

However, the Lions proved to be a formidable opponent, and the Quakers ultimately fell short in their efforts.

The match was closely contested throughout, with both teams demonstrating impressive skills and determination.

In the end, the Columbia Lions emerged victorious, leaving the Pennsylvania Quakers to reflect on their performance and plan for future improvements.

Quakers Turn Back Different Attacks

By Donald Castle

The Penn women's basketball team continued its strong season with a dominating victory over Bucknell University. The Quakers have been a force to be reckoned with, and they showcased their skills once again in this match.

Head coach Kathy Delaplane praised her team's cohesion and teamwork, stating that they had executed their game plan flawlessly.

The Quakers took control early, capitalizing on a 20-point lead in the first half. They maintained their momentum throughout the game, never allowing Bucknell to come close.

The final score was 83-65 in favor of the Quakers, demonstrating their dominance on the court.

Crimson, Big Green See Red (and Blue)

By BETH STEGNER

The Harvard Crimson and the University of Pennsylvania Quakers faced off in a thrilling Ivy League contest.

The game was tightly contested, with both teams displaying impressive offensive and defensive skills. The Quakers, however, emerged victorious, securing their place at the top of the league standings.

Roses are Red, Violets are Blue

By BETH STEGNER

The Ivies' performance in the Ivy League championships was truly remarkable. The Quakers capped off their season with another victory, solidifying their status as the dominant force in the conference.

The team's success was a testament to their hard work and dedication, and it set the stage for an exciting future.

Tigers Take Heptagonals As Thindalls Finish Sixth

By BETH STEGNER

The Pennsylvania men's track team ended its season on a high note, claiming the Ivy League championship. The team's efforts were rewarded with a dominating victory, propelling them to the top spot.

The victory was a fitting end to a season marked by hard work and dedication. The Quakers proved their resilience and skill, earning a well-deserved win.

Quakers Still Lead League After Two Weekend Wins

By BETH STEGNER

The Quakers continued their dominance in the Ivy League, securing two impressive victories over their rivals.

These wins solidified their position as the league leaders, showcasing their strength and determination. The team's relentless pursuit of excellence was evident in every match, leaving no doubt about their status as the league's premier squad.
