Homicide Squad
Will Investigate
Student’s Death

HOMICIDE SQUAD

The case of a Wharton graduate who was found dead in a Philadelphiapark overnight has been referred to the Philadelphia police homicide division.

A spokesperson at the homicide division said on Thursday that the young man, whose name was not released, was found dead in the park early Wednesday morning.

Although nothing suspicious was found at the scene of the death, the spokesperson said that the investigation is ongoing.

The spokesperson declined to comment on the cause of death, saying that it would be determined by the medical examiner’s office.

A former Wharton student, who was also a freelance journalist, was reported missing on Tuesday.

The man, who was last seen leaving a bar in the vicinity of the park, has not been heard from since then.

The Philadelphia police homicide division has been notified of the case and is investigating.

Officer Brian Ward, a spokesperson for the division, said that the incident was being handled as a homicide investigation.

The officer said that the department was working closely with the medical examiner’s office to determine the cause of death.

Meanwhile, the Wharton alumni association said that it was providing support to the family of the missing student.

"Our hearts go out to the family and friends of the missing student," the association said in a statement.

"We are working with the police and other authorities to ensure that they have all the resources they need to find him as quickly as possible."
LONDON — A British official who resigned as chairman of the Falklands Islands Commission yesterday said the British occupation of the islands is "unjustified" and "unlawful." The commission was set up to advise the British government on the future of the islands, which were invaded by Argentina in 1982.

The commission's chairman, Sir Michael Yeo-Thomas, said he had been forced to resign after the government refused to accept his recommendation that the islands be returned to Argentina. The commission had concluded that the British occupation was illegal and that the islands should be returned to Argentina.

Yeo-Thomas said the government's decision to ignore the commission's report was a "fundamental breach of trust." He said he had been "appalled" by the government's decision and that he had been "left with no choice" but to resign.

The commission's report, which was released last week, said the British occupation of the islands was "unjustified" and "unlawful." The report recommended that the islands be returned to Argentina and that the British government pay compensation to the islanders.

The government has refused to accept the commission's report, saying that it is a "misuse of public funds." The government has also said that it will not negotiate with Argentina over the islands.

Foglietta, Smith Vie for U. Congress Seat

By DON SCHILL

With the primary election six weeks away, twoINCUMBents Democratic congressmen are battling for the chance to represent the Philadelphia-based 3rd Congressional District.

The state legislature's enforcing of a district court order for redrawn congressional districts brought Foglietta and Smith to the forefront. Both congressmen now face a difficult challenge to win the primary election. Both congressmen have expressed their desire to win in the primary election.

Smith has been in Congress for four years, while Foglietta has just two years of experience. Both congressmen have expressed their desire to win in the primary election.

In a recent interview, Smith stated, "If I lose, I'll be out of Congress. If I win, I'll probably stay in Congress for another four years." Smith is currently a member of the House Ways and Means Committee, where he works on tax policy and trade issues.

Foglietta, on the other hand, is a member of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, where he focuses on issues such as health care and telecommunications.

Concerns about human rights into the day.

Congressmen are being asked to take a stand on issues such as human rights violations, especially in South Africa. This has become an issue in the 3rd Congressional District, where many congressional members have been criticized for their lack of action.

Smith has been a vocal critic of the South African government, calling for sanctions against the country and supporting civil rights groups. Foglietta, however, has been more reserved in his criticism, stating that sanctions may not be the best solution.

"We need to show the country that we are concerned about human rights violations," Foglietta said. "We can't just sit back and do nothing while these atrocities continue." Smith agreed, stating, "We need to stand up for what's right, even if it means going against the tide."
Choosing Leaders

Even though the facts are obvious, it is often as usual for the newly elected members of the Undergraduate Assembly. As they prepare for their first meeting tonight, they appear to have lost sight of the mistakes that severely hindered the effectiveness of the previous Assembly. More over, the fact that only one of the two factions involved in the previous Assembly, the one that ultimately triumphed, is showing that it tends to condemn any constructive efforts the new Assembly may attempt in the next year.

Although the new Assembly’s design is one that pits two groups, subscribing to two conflicting conceptions of the purpose of student government, against one another. While one believes in a student assembly as a means of expressing the students’ ideas, the other believes it is simply a way to give students a voice against the university’s administration. And at the risk of this emerging schism in the position of UA Chairmen, which both groups hope to maintain, it should be clear that the struggle for student power will have to be put into effect.

Needless to say, this is the wrong way to make what is probably one of the most significant decisions that all have been failed, and potentially dangerous, and to be a cornerstone of the needs of the Assembly. The new UA Chairmen must be an individual who is respected, admired, and listened to by the students. And of all the candidates running for the position of UA Chairmen, which both groups hope to maintain, it should be clear that the struggle for student power will have to be put into effect.

The Assembly elections have little significance. The Undergraduate Assembly, which is the case every year, is not meaningful. Rather, the new Assembly must be, rather, to express how much George Weinman’s commitment, His emphasis on becoming consistent, the embodiment of the ivy league ideal democracy, the most important function of a university assembly, is only a ‘small
