2. The medical school contributes 20 departments, but the cancer club is only a shadow of the real medical school. School officials have made no effort to establish the medical school's resources for cancer research. The club is in the process of developing a research program.

Four recent alumni have made headlines in the financial field, and one particularly successful business woman is the subject of this week's spotlight. B. Bernard Alexander '43, who worked for a marketing and advertising agency in New York City, has greatly helped his former university, Wharton, by donating a substantial amount of money.

Alexander, a Wharton 1943 graduate, is the publisher of Business Week. "As Wharton alum, I was pleased to have the opportunity to help Wharton, and I am sure others would do the same," he said.

Compromising Destiny

Social Problems of Graduate/Professional Students

In the winter of 1948, I recall how one of my best friends was deeply concerned about his health and safety. He had just begun graduate school and was feeling very overwhelmed by the workload and pressures. He was also worried about the financial strain and feeling isolated from his peers.

I've always been concerned about the mental health of graduate students. The pressure to succeed and excel can be overwhelming, especially when they're away from home and their support network. It's important to offer resources and support to help them manage these challenges.

Dear Editor:

I'm writing to draw attention to the issue of mental health among graduate students. The pressure to succeed and excel can be overwhelming, especially when they're away from home and their support network. It's important to offer resources and support to help them manage these challenges.

34th Street Earns Top Columbia Award

The editorial staff of the Columbia Daily Spectator, a student publication, was honored with the National Association of College Publications highest award, the General Excellence award. This is the second time the Spectator has won the award.

The Spectator's award-winning efforts include its coverage of the Columbia Medical School, its role as a source of information for students, and its commitment to publishing a wide range of topics.

The award comes at a time when the Spectator is expanding its coverage of health-related issues, including a new series on cancer research and treatment.

Cancer Center Blends Health Disciplines

The Cancer Center at the University of Pennsylvania is a multi-disciplinary center that brings together experts from various fields to provide comprehensive care to patients with cancer.

The center's mission is to provide the best possible care to patients with cancer, using the latest in research and technology.

The center's team of experts includes surgeons, radiation therapists, oncologists, nurses, and other specialists who work together to provide the best possible care to patients.

The center also offers a variety of support services, including counseling and support groups, to help patients cope with the challenges of cancer.

Mayor Sends Van To Hear Complaints

By KENNY BERNBAUM

Mayor William Green's "mobile office" was parked on the corners of 36th and Market Streets yesterday, giving local residents a chance to bring their concerns and complaints to the mayor directly.

Green travels through Philadelphia at least twice a month, stopping in touch with the problems of local neighborhoods. Although Green was unavailable to stuff the van yesterday, employees from his office were on hand to accept questions.

The office is an extension of the mayor's "complaint office," which helps citizens deal directly with the city government. "If people have problems with other agencies, we are their advocates," White said.

Three people from the complaint office also go around with the van, said Nolan, an employee who travels with the van. Nolan and followed up by the mayor's call: "We know the ins and outs of all the offices in the city," she said.

Nolan said some people visit the van to express concern about their job, or to vent. Nolan said that many people had come in recently to complain about where the city or state offices are located and how hard it is to get answers.

"If people have problems with other agencies, we are their advocates," White said.

Heinz Defends Education Spending

Cherry Hill, N. J.

A symposium on the uses of small computers in the arts education will be held at the University Museum auditorium, Saturday night at 7:30 p.m. Admission is $5.

Richard Powell and Roger Powell, founders of the "Painting Power" program for Apple computers in their work, will speak about the program and the use of computers in their music. Also speaking on the creation of computer graphics will be a student from Princeton University.

Heinz repeated from page 6: "These are appropriate and moderate approaches. "We pulled the plug on American financing of the Polish regime, that would just about automatically "turns the knobs and pushes the buttons that he needs," Poditz said.

Harry Poditz said that while the administration's change in policy was a good thing, the United States should not believe the United States is better. "If we consider our civilization better than any other civilization, it's easy to enjoy every moment of it," Poditz said. "But it is unreasonable for the general public."

"For better or for worse, this is a very enjoyable and admirable success story," Poditz said. "I believe that the United States is better. I would like to improve everything, but I'm not sure that the United States is better."

The event will begin at 2:30 p.m. and will end at 4:30 p.m. Student admission is $4.50.

Red Hot Spikers Win Twelfth In A Row

Barnard Invitational Provides Next Challenge

By STEVE BERNHALL

So, it doesn’t sound too good for the 29-6 Princeton. But in the case of the Red, it sounds like a victory in the eyes of Barnard coach Ann Judelson.

"At this point, we’re right where we should be — technically, tactically and in terms of wins and losses," said Judelson.

Victory number 18 and 19 were posted at Lafayette Wednesday.

Ltwts. Seek First Victory against Knights

By MARTIN DASH

SIX PLAYERS remain after a series of injuries to the Princeton field hockey team. The game against the Red Hot Spikers this weekend at the N.J. State Fair Auxiliary Gymnasium is sure to be a difficult one.

The Princeton team has been working hard throughout the week to prepare for the match against Rutgers.

"We’re going to get another good test in this game," said Judelson. "The Spikers are a very good team and we need to be at our best to have a chance of winning.

Unbeaten Gridders Tussle With Leopards

In a Big Five clash, will Penn continue its roll or will the Leopards deny it another victory?

It is one of the two remaining weeks of action before the Big Five Championship competition is completed, and the Leopards have to face Penn on Saturday. The Leopards have won their last two games, while Penn is undefeated in four games. The game will be played on the Leopards' home turf, and the outcome will be crucial for both teams.

The Leopards are currently ranked second in the nation, while Penn holds the third spot. The game will also mark the return of former coach Karl Nordheim to the sidelines, a move that could boost Penn's chances.

Leopards' defense remains strong, while Penn's offense has been scoring consistently. The Leopards will need to stop Penn's high-powered attack, while Penn will have to contain the Leopards' solid defense.

The game is set to be an exciting one, and fans are eagerly期待ing to see which team will come out on top. It promises to be a classic Big Five showdown, and both teams will be giving it their all to emerge victorious.
