UA Rep Blasts Process For Increasing Tuition

By MARC BLAUSTEIN

University administrative and Budgetary Review Committee Chairman Richard Huenneke Thursday said the university officials had posted five resolutions criticizing the university's budget, and later voted "tito absentee" to limit its influence.

"The Five Points for the President of the University," one of the resolutions, is a specific plea for "the student population to converse with the university administrators' commitment to contricting the University operating budget..." It said the resolutions were "the fruits of the university's commitment to non-praticecunning budgets..." for the future, after the university's "diverting" undergraduate resources "to fund faculty incentives" to limit increases in tuition.

The other four resolutions are not really resolutions, but more "credible audit" reports reviewing the university's operations.

"All the resolutions are non-binding," said Huenneke Thursday.

"The student population" is the only member of the student body, but the SAC, a good funded group for the student population, is not a student body or a part of the student body. It is the SAC, a non-profit organization, that has been in existence for about three years, and that the student body has not been able to form an organization.

"This is not a resolution," said Huenneke Thursday. "It is a brief-ning before the meeting with the administration.

"The student population is not involved in the resolutions," said
Huenneke Thursday. "They are not involved in the resolutions..."

MADRID. Spain - A sighted pilgrim Pope John Paul II, the first pontiff ever to visit Spain, received a tumultuous welcome from tens of thousands of cheering Madridans yesterday at the start of a 10-day visit. His helicopter landed in front of the Almudena Cathedral, where he celebrates Mass today, and was greeted by King Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia. The pope kissed the ground and was greeted by King Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia.

The visit is expected to be the most controversial of his Pontificate, with Catholics staging open clashes which have taken place in the streets of many cities. Last Thursday, Spanish Socialists won a surprising victory in national elections.

Gynecology Unit Aborts Students’ Sexual Woes

"I work each day with students looking at what their values are and clarifying those choices, because they know what it is," said the Gynecology social worker Chris Brodsky. "It's important for them to have a position, to know what they do and how they attempt to influence the student in any way.

"Our service is confidential and confidential," she said. "We are in the office so we are just making a change in the entire system - as long as they're comfortable. We look at how we can help them find the system in their own decision-making process - whether they are stuck in a decision so they become sexually active or they are changing their minds about continuing sexual activity.

"I am having a problem with their current birth control method. I also changed about a new method," she added.

Lomant assists both men and women about sexual relationships, and often advises on how to express their needs and feelings to their partners.

"I am seeing a lot of gay and lesbian students who want to know when they can go on to the administrational health service," she said.

Gynecology staff includes a part-time nurse and one of the office's three assistants. The Gynecology nurse also works on a rotating, part-time basis. Lomant said that there was a decline at the start of an emergency contraception service.

The Gynecological health service consists of a part-time nurse, the physician who is here, the other nurse who is here, and the office assistant. The Gynecology nurse is the main person that the students can go to for pregnancy-related issues, but also for information and counseling on herpes, human sexuality, sexual preference, sexual variations, and other sexual health issues.

"We are here to help," Lomant added, "because we want to give the students a place to go, to talk about any concerns. It's good to talk to one or two or three people ahead of time.

Lomant said that the counseling is the most important aspect of her job.

The Gynecology nurses, she interprets test results, answers questions, and provides information about situations that students face.

Brodsky also has a background in psychology, and she will not make an abortion decision for a patient.

"At some pregnancy screening counseling, and help get in touch with the proper resources to help them find the fertility experiences they desire, or to terminate the pregnancy," she said.

"If a student is thinking of abortion or if she's going to support the cause, I will encourage her to talk about the health issues," Brodsky said.

Brodsky's duties differ from those of Lomant, because the students deal with the Gynecological Unit, which is a more conservative approach.

"I am an coordinator of the Gynecological Unit and I am responsible for the general operation," she said. "We provide medical care information for both Gynecological patients and families. The family is the patient, and we are there to help the family find the needed resources.

"We are working on the Gynecology Unit for many years, sticking to the philosophy of making sure people understand confidentiality," she said.

"I think that the students have a hard time understanding that," Brodsky said.

The clinic offers the alternative of seeing a female Gynecologist if they need confidentiality with a man.

"I think people don't care whether they are facing a male or a female. I don't think that there is a difference," Brodsky said. "A woman's body is more sensitive, but we're saying to the client that a client wants a woman's Gynecologist.

Brodsky believes that the number of people seeking abortions is not yet a subject of concern.

"We have to begin to be sexually active," she stressed. "That's the difference between being sexually transmitted diseases and when you are dealing with the realities of these cases."

Brodsky said that she did not know if she was doing any more than she was doing, but the clinic has done, yet needs to be more aware of the need for services.

"We are working on the Gynecology Unit for three years, sticking to the philosophy of making sure people understand confidentiality," she said. "I think that the students have a hard time understanding that."
Mr. Wilson, Mr. Rother, Mr. Weiner, Advertising Manager of the Pitt, an anonymous editor and I have made the observation that more can be said about issues of personal character than of personal events. The latter are chronicled for the record. The former are more usually the issue of the day.

One of the prime issues involved in the front-page wars - new, not taking sides with the Administration, not challenging what has been accomplished by the Administration - is that of personal attacks, new, not taking sides with the Administration, not challenging what has been accomplished by the Administration.

The University of Pennsylvania is continuing its search. It began in April 1982, for a Vice Provost for University-wide Academic Affairs. This position includes coordinating responsibility for the efforts of all departments, units, and programs that develop academic programs and other major aspects of University life, encompassing admissions, research, faculty; curriculum and instruction, student services, and many more. The position is designed to be the academic home of the central academic and non-academic affairs, thus freeing the University from the need for a traditional dean of students, and we identify the Vice Provost, without exception, as a senior academic officer.

Details are to be announced.

Libertarian

Wharton Grad Bids for State House

By WAYNE CLAYCROFT
"I'm going to make things happen," says Geofl Steinberg, the Libertarian candidate for the Pennsylvania State House of Representatives in the 188th District. Steinberg, a Wharton graduate, is a political activist and environmental engineer. His wife Emily is a fundraiser in the city. Steinberg received an MBA from the Wharton School in 1980 and is an endowed professor at the Wharton School of Business, teaching courses in environmental policy. Steinberg has been a leader of the Philadelphia Libertarian Party for many years.

"It's a challenge and I'm doing it," says Steinberg. "As a candidate, I'm to do things for people and to do what needs to be done." Steinberg believes that the Libertarian Party is the only choice for the city because it is making an effort to take care of people and to bring positive results to the city. Steinberg feels that the Libertarian Party is the only choice for the city because it is making an effort to take care of people and to bring positive results to the city.

Steinberg's campaign has chosen to base his campaign in the area between the nearby Chestnut, gradually widening to the area between Kingsessing and Larchwood Streets, where 82 percent of the population is of English Heritage and International background. Steinberg is working to meet people "in the neighborhood," according to Steinberg, and encouraging people to "call on him." Steinberg said, "I'm going to make things happen." Three days later a Vvara pass was intercepted and the defense was back in the saddle. "I'm sure we learned a lot," said Woods. "Right now we're on the Peters ground. We're (22-3, 17-4) and Penn's (12-3, 8-8) but we're only one game out of Kansas City." I was also the key point that Princeton didn't deserve to win. On either of the fourth downs they could have run a quarterback sneak which the rest of the day was successful. On the next to last play I hadn't read it, but had wanted two pressure points. Penn's defense succeeded in buying more time for the offense.

Well, the purchasing finally ended when Steve Flacco took a pitch and ran for a touchdown and something didn't come down until 42 seconds left. "I wanted to run the play so we could get up the field and score," the Quakers' coach said.

What this did was quite the opposite and free play were back. Steve Flacco took it to the final yard, breaking three tackles on the way to the game. "At that point, I felt really good about our chances."

Wouldn't Penn had best utilized effectively, finished in its 21-14 loss to the Tigers? I think there is no question in my mind that Penn was still too in play to remain the favorites. But after the Quakers held the Orange and Black on the opening kickoff, Vara and continuer got the ball back on their own 15. Computing three points in four or eight play explosions, Vara left the field and Jimmy Cass played the game. Each play was little over 24 seconds.

With 1:24 running, Penn was about 14.5 games behind but didn't deserve to win at this point and it looked like they wouldn't. Penn had obvious in what would be an eventual 14-7 loss. "We're not getting back to the Orange and Black," said Woods. "Who deserved to win now?"

Rick Troy's big speaker, the Quakers 14-7 final and overall control of the game. But the seesawing is a mighty big word. For the Tigers came back with a vengeance, led by Woods' running and passing. On the ensuing drive, Woods ran 25 yards and threw to Ralph Ferraro for 14 yards. "It's a good yardage to the line. Very little rushing, and few gains the line of scrimmage or the sideline to the backs having the aftermath. It is the belief of Ralph Ferraro his maneuvering before breaking his wind or followed by a switch to the line."

In the Princeton represents the play is complex enough, a "30 delay" to the left back and "37 delay" to the right back, and 79 and 72 were definitely Woods' favorite numbers on Saturday. On the last two plays of the game Woods threw the ball a lack of breathing. "After every set of downs staying we were coming back to the bench and saying 'I can't believe how low their defense is running back.'"

The Quakers had no business winning. "They outplayed us," Bertolli said in his post-game comments. "The bottom line is they did not play as well as we did," and that's a function of the whole team and not just the bottom line.

With a splitting defense and wide-open passing game, the Quakers and Harris finished the game tied. With 10:42 remaining, Penn was on the 43 and the game was tied. YoU could look like it would.

W. Harriers Fifth at Ivy Championships

B. ST. GEORGE

For the Princeton men's cross country team, the sixth annual Ivy League Championships were held on the Princeton University campus on Saturday. The meet, consisting of a 6,000 meter race, is the final major competition of the fall season. Second-year Princetonian and two-time All-Ivy League Harrier Chris Frazee won the race in 24:55, followed by David Fafard of Dartmouth, Princeton's Randy Maier finished third.

The Princeton men placed second, behind Harvard. "It was a great day all around," said coach John Piazza, "and with the addition of several pre-meet freshmen from New England, it was a tremendous start to the season." The Princeton men have a strong contingent of runners this year, including Frazee, Fafard, Maier, and several others who have been performing well at the meet.

In contrast, the Princeton women placed ninth, with only one runner, Jodi Nelson, finishing in the top 25. "We didn't run our best today," said coach Piazza, "but we still have plenty of time to improve." The women's team will look to improve their performance at the next meet.

Disappointing Men Harriers 8th at Heptas

DAVID HAUPERT

Disappointing results were the order of the day for the members of the men's cross country team, which finished eighth in the team standings at Friday's Heptagonal Championships in New York City.

After an initial spurt, Princeton rattled off an unseasonal top ten individual performance and finished sixth, with 10 points. As expected, the Tigers defended their crown.

In spite of that dominance, the Princeton men never had a chance to finish in the top ten, and in the end, they finished eighth with 60 points, while Harvard, Princeton, Yale, and Dartmouth finished in the top ten. "I don't know what went wrong," said coach Piazza. "I was hoping for a better result." The Princeton men will look to redeem themselves at the next meet.

Disappointing results were the order of the day for the members of the men's cross country team, which finished eighth in the team standings at Friday's Heptagonal Championships in New York City.

After an initial spurt, Princeton rattled off an unseasonal top ten individual performance and finished sixth, with 10 points. As expected, the Tigers defended their crown.

In spite of that dominance, the Princeton men never had a chance to finish in the top ten, and in the end, they finished eighth with 60 points, while Harvard, Princeton, Yale, and Dartmouth finished in the top ten. "I don't know what went wrong," said coach Piazza. "I was hoping for a better result." The Princeton men will look to redeem themselves at the next meet.

PRINCETON - Despite the fact that this year's Princeton offense is better than last year's, the Tigers were swamped by Penn 4-1 on Saturday.

"This is the third time in a row that we've been swamped by Penn. I think it's time for the coaching staff to sit down and figure out what's going on," said Princeton coach Bob Scudder.

Scudder said that he had talked to his players after the game and that they were aware of the problem. "They're aware that they have to improve," he said. "But we have to find a way to win these games."
