Uncle Sam Pays for Lion's Share of U. Research

BY DAVID FISHER

Every researcher in the Engineering School studio published. And usually, the government funds the bill.

Fifteen years ago, the University was making more noise and other war-shit stuff, which the University was doing. The war was over, and the University was no longer in the business of producing weapons.

The University now regains $580 million in its $727 million research budget from the government. Close to 70 percent of all research revenue earned by the University comes from government sources.

Many in the University feel that the government, not the Department of Defense, is the primary overseer of all research at the University. As one sociology professor said, "You can see the symptoms, but you can't see the disease."

"Any research that involves national security," he added, "is going to be funded by Uncle Sam."

"The government was adversarial as the place where research should be done," said a professor.

"But the large amount of great money given by the government, the University felt it had to rely on the government for most of its projects."

"This research operates on a self-interest basis," another professor said. "The University would not exist without government funding."

Most of the funding comes in the form of federal contracts. Last year the University had 75 contracts and 1062 grants for research with the government.

"The University has a policy of refusing to do any contracts for defense," he said. "A contract, regardless of the parameters of the research, will only be accepted if the funding comes from the government."

"If the government is going to fund research, it should be the government," said a professor from the University's College of Arts and Sciences.

"The government can fund research, but it can't fund research for defense."

Engineering Professor Joseph Biederman heads the project that will begin in a few months. Biederman, a former member of the Defense Department, said that his research deals with the national security of the University.

"We have nothing to do with guns," said Biederman. "We're going to study the way people think."

Going for a Ride on the Market Street Subway

By MARKACARD

This was a question. It fitted us two into Monday when I wrote on an SEPTA adventure, armed only with pens and copybooks of my notes.

Monday, April 5 was a fine and and come down both stairs at the same time, so I stood by the entrance. We stand between the television and phone, which had just arrived. We descended the stairs of the subway train, another man was standing with a small orange bag, others were sitting down and others were pacing back and forth. The train came, and we waited for the next train without incident.

We reached the top of the stairs by 1 am, quite different.

We went down the stairs at 9th and Chestnut and walked underground to the Market Street station. The sound of a bunch of old ladies laughing in great good humor and standing around was heard through the echoes of subway trains.

As we reached the top, a man took up his position and the station was fairly quiet by this hour.

"SEPTA is like a god," he said slowly, his breath filling the air with the sound of alcohol.

He said he had been living for ten years. However, he said that he did not trouble the subway stations because he had never been in them.

"I think the stations are quiet. I don't see any trouble," he said.

"But the trains are packed!" I said.

"All became quiet in the train stop."

"So the way you put your stop on the train is the way the trains arrive at the station."

Before leading back I talked to SEPTA and police officers and a SEPTA officer who was writing up a citation for a man who was standing in the train stop. He said he was not sure if he was charged.

"We are trying to get more people out of the station, just to keep the trains running now."

"We are still dealing with the problem, but we need more people. We are still looking for places to get change for the train."

"People get injured, robbed, a lot happens here," he said.

But the officer, who also did not treat the instance, said he could not do anything about it.

"It's not SI PI V -he aided. "I've done it before," he said.

If you want to know what they have, they have 60 cars. The people are doing what they can in the SEPTA Police, said the officer.

Benefits for Faculty Children

To the Editor,

I was pleased to read the letter of Professor G. C. H. Wilson in the November 15, 1982, issue of The Daily Pennsylvania. He stated that he had reviewed the records of the state employment prevention program and found that for every two children on the program, one family benefited less.

I am interested in hearing what other faculty members have to say about the program and how it has affected their families.

Sincerely,

GAS-TROENTERITIS

The most prevalent gastrointestinal illness in the world today is acute gas- troenteritis. Symptoms of this illness vary from mild to severe, and the type of symptoms experienced depends on the individual. The symptoms of gastroenteritis can include nausea, vomiting, diarrhea, fever, and fatigue. A person with gastroenteritis may also experience cramps and a sense of abdominal fullness.

The cause of gastroenteritis is usually a virus, but it can also be caused by bacteria or parasites. The virus can be transmitted from person to person through contaminated food or water. It is important to practice good hygiene and to wash your hands frequently to prevent the spread of the virus.

The treatment for gastroenteritis depends on the severity of the symptoms. Mild cases may only require rest and fluids to replace lost electrolytes. In more severe cases, medical intervention may be necessary to prevent complications such as dehydration or electrolyte imbalance.

It is important to seek medical attention if you or someone you know is experiencing symptoms of gastroenteritis. Early treatment can help prevent complications and improve the chances of recovery.

Sincerely,

Dr. Sam Fager

Voting as a Bloc

The rapid rise of Y. A. Andropov to the head of the Communist Party in the course of the slow and orderly political transition in the Soviet Union. Biden's death was an unexpected event which led to the rapid rise of Y. A. Andropov to the head of the Communist Party. The position as head of the Soviet Union was a position of great power and responsibility.

As a bloc, we can only do what we can. The bloc was formed because of the need to prevent a quick and decisive split in the Soviet Union. For a time, we were able to prevent a split, but now the situation is more complex.

We cannot do as much as we would like, but we can do what we can. We can do what we can do not to be treated like weapons. We will fight for our own rights.

We will try to sound our voices, our voices, and our voices, but we cannot do as much as we would like.

Sincerely,

Bill Clinton

"So much for knowing the score."

To the Editor,

"We at Pocket Bowl were quite pleasurable to be able to serve the customers of the University. We were able to serve them with a variety of foods that were both healthy and delicious.

But it is not all good news. We had to deal with some difficult situations. We had to deal with some difficult situations that were beyond our control.

We are looking forward to the future. We are looking forward to the future and the challenges that lie ahead.

Sincerely,

What's in a Name?

In reference to Wendy Weisberg's letter on the name of the state, "What's in a Name?" (the November 15, 1982, issue of The Daily Pennsylvania), I would like to offer an alternative name for the state: "What's in a Name?"

I found that, in some cases, people seemed to attach too much importance to the name of the state. I believe that the name of the state should be taken as a symbol of the state's culture and history, rather than as a source of prestige or power.

Sincerely,

Ehrlich Lauds Student Efforts on Tuition

Ehrlich expressed regret over the proposed 15 percent tuition hike at the University of Wisconsin last year. Ehrlich said that faculty will be form the job an) better. "If a suggestion is made, he said, to reduce classroom size, the answer should be "a lot better."" Ehrlich said that faculty members should be encouraged to participate in the decision-making process, and that "we" should have a "lot better," he said. Following graduation, he faced a great deal of pressure during his freshman season at Maccabi Tel-Aviv. It was during this time that he began to question the value of the system he was playing in and realized that he was not achieving his potential.

Instead, he was forced to step back and reevaluate his approach. He began to focus more on the fundamentals of the game and the importance of teamwork. This led to a significant improvement in his performance and a newfound sense of enjoyment.

As for asking Penn to give the game back, you're not being fair to the people of New England. It could serve as a reminder of the importance of values.

The Ivy League, which includes eight of the nation's best college football programs, is considered a pinnacle of athletic excellence. Throughout its history, the Ivy League has been known for its tradition of excellence and its commitment to academic integrity.

In light of the recent controversy involving Penn and Harvard, it is important that the Ivy League continue to uphold its high standards. The Ivy League is a unique and special event in college football, and it is essential that it remain so.

Upon leaving Penn, Restic joined the coaching staff at the University of Pennsylvania, where he has continued to excel both in the classroom and on the football field. He is a true testament to the values and principles that he upheld throughout his career at Penn and the Ivy League.
Ivy Ideal Mixed Up By Harvard's Restic

I talked to Peter Dranoff on the phone yesterday afternoon and for the first time this year he didn't sound like a man who was running out of ideas. While he still has no plan to leave Harvard in the near future, he is busier than ever, as the press is now referring to him as a "permanent athletic director." The weekend was a welcome respite from the academic pressures of college, and the men's and women's rowing teams took full advantage of it.

The men's and women's rowing teams had a successful weekend at the New York City Rowing Association's Regatta on Sunday. The men's team performed well, finishing fifth, while the women's team finished ninth. The teams are looking forward to their next competition in the spring.

Joe Moreira: "Justice was served" when Cornell beat Penn. The Quakers allowed Cornell to slice off a 1/4 victory Sunday to capture the championship. The massacre was not completed until the second half, when Harvard and Yale were meeting at Baker Field. The game was long and the rest was short.

Spikers Fall to Cornell in Regional Finals

B. STEVE BERKOWITZ

The team that overwhelmed the Harvard women's volleyball team on Wednesday night was not the 1981-82 team, but rather the 1981-82 team. The Quakers won the first two sets, but the Big Red came back to win the last two. The match was long and the game was short.

Unfortunately for the Penn women, the only thing they had going for them was the crowd, which was loud and boisterous. The Quakers put on a show for the fans, but the Big Red proved too much for them.

The opening round of the tournament was quite an experience for the girls, who were playing in front of a packed house. The Big Red proved too much for them, as they were unable to overcome the deficit.

The Quakers dominated the game in the first set, building a lead that they were able to maintain until the end. They were able to overcome the deficit and win the second set, but were unable to sustain the momentum in the third set.

The race was run in near-perfect conditions, with the sun shining brightly and the air crisp and clear. The crews performed well, with the Quakers capturing first place in the men's and women's divisions. The team's victory was well-deserved, as they had been preparing for this race all season. The Quakers have been working hard to improve their performance and are looking forward to the upcoming regattas.

The Quakers' victory comes after a season of challenges and setbacks. They had to overcome the loss of several key members, but they were able to maintain their focus and continue to improve.

The men's and women's rowing teams are looking forward to their next competition in the spring. They are working hard to improve their performance and are confident in their ability to achieve their goals.
