Two Found Guilty in Assaults

Two members of Psi Upsilon, a fraternity, were found guilty yesterday of raping a non-member of the university. The men were found to have raped and battered a woman on the campus.

The two men, both members of Psi Upsilon, were arrested after the incident was reported. They were charged with rape and assault.

The trial lasted for several weeks, during which time evidence was presented by both sides. The jury found the men guilty after considering all of the evidence presented.

The court sentenced the men to prison, with one receiving a longer sentence than the other. The men are expected to appeal their sentences.

IN SUPPORT OF ISRAEL WE AFFIRM OUR UNYIELDING SUPPORT FOR THE STATE OF ISRAEL and recognize its right to live within secure and recognized boundaries free from threat or act of force. We feel that it is essential for the Congress and the Administration to continue the bi-partisan policies which enhance the economic stability and the military security of the State of Israel. These policies are clearly beneficial to both Americans and Israelis.

In light of this consensus, we commemorate the November 29, 1947 United Nations resolution which resulted in the establishment of the Jewish State. We regret the continued rejection of this historic act by most of Israel's neighbors. We support negotiations with Palestinian representatives who openly acknowledge the legitimacy of the State of Israel! We feel that this condition is the essential prerequisite to sincere negotiations designed to guarantee Palestinian & Israeli rights while simultaneously insuring peace for all. A genuine peace between Israel and her neighbors must encompass full diplomatic relations, the end of hostile propaganda, and the termination of political and economic distortions. These objectives can only be attained through mutual understanding and respect for the rights of all the people who live in this troubled region. When these goals are realized, Israeli and her neighbors will live in peace and tranquility.

News In Brief

Reagan: Tax Cuts Will Boost Economy LOS ANGELES - President Reagan drew the country to his side yesterday with a personal appeal to two important groups: the business community and the Wall Street Journal, which has been critical of his tax-cut programs. The message amounted to a thinly veiled appeal to cut taxes in order to stabilize the economy, with a particular emphasis on the long-term fiscal picture. Reagan said he has no plans to change the basic structure of the tax system, but he did say he will keep withholding cuts in July. "This is not a bill to change the Internal Revenue code, that's for the next session, but it is the next step in the moderate reality today, he said. "That's the level of the debate, and I don't have the votes for a speeded-up version of the final phase."

In a speech to the Wall Street Journal carried on the floor of the House, Reagan said that business and Wall Street have long supported tax cuts, but that business and Wall Street today are being challenged to raise the money to sustain the economy. Reagan said that business and Wall Street must have a "framework" for tax cuts to work and that economic growth is the key. He said that business and Wall Street have supported tax cuts because they believe that they will benefit their companies and jobs. He also said that Wall Street has not been critical of his tax-cut programs because they believe that they will benefit their companies and jobs.

A New FAS Dean Conarroe- Huges and the committee made it clear, Conarroe said, that they all had "about 140 nominations. We went through every one of them and got a good opportunity to talk to the faculty and see the quality of their work." He said that the committee considered the candidates' ability, experience, and qualifications. It was not a question of whether they had been on the FAS faculty for a short time or a long period of time, or whether they had been on the FAS faculty at all. The committee considered the candidates' suitability for the position of FAS Dean. The committee considered the candidates' suitability for the position of FAS Dean. Elderly Reflect on Society’s Changes

By J. SARTOKIS

Philadelphia’s Elderly
(First in a two-part series)

Philadelphia, a group as wise as any of the elderly people interviewed for this story, says that their lives are precious. "I was a kid, a grocery store would be, "You have to be careful," says Bstella, a 68-year-old woman. "You see the police here a lot - especially if you're a black man." And over. "If you love people, you don't want nobody looking me up. You can't get a job to cover the expenses without transportation to get to work," says Bstella. "Oh yes, you have to be careful. But I'm a former businessman, and by the time I was 82, "It's a lot rougher for them than it was when I was a kid, a grocery store would be, "They were more running things," he says. "But you were pretty well off financially," he says. "But I'm happy," says Jerry. "The God of love has given me a good life, and here I can watch others live their lives when they're happiest - their Christmas new and loving," he says. Letters

To the University Community: With the opening of several new residence halls, students on campus find that they are living in a world of dorms. The new halls have all the modern amenities, but they lack the personal touch that older dorms had. The students would like to see more emphasis on the personal aspects of campus life. They feel that the university should do more to make the halls feel like home.

Annenberg Seeks Staff
For New D.C. Program

By LEE SCHALLOP

A search committee is underway to select administration and faculty for an Annenberg School program in Washington, D.C.

The program, which is being cosponsored by the Annenberg School of Communications — at the University and at the University of Southern California — will begin activities in September 1983.

The purpose of the program, according to Dean George Gerbner, is to "offer a strong research and consulting component. Special facilities will be available, including a library, meeting rooms and other resources necessary to conduct communications policy research."

Hornik, who is working with Gerbner to set up the program, says the new program will consist of three main programs, which will count toward a graduate degree. "It is difficult because there are so many well-qualified people," Annenberg Dean George Gerbner said.

The first part of the program will be aimed at mid-career professionals, to maintain and improve their qualifications, "He said there will be a special emphasis on career-level training. "People with an insufficient background which to draw on, as well as professionals who are not available to teach on a full-time basis," Gerbner said.

He said there will be a library, meeting rooms and other resources necessary to conduct communications policy research. "It will give them better knowledge of what options are presently being conducted in Philadelphia."

One special advantage of Washington, D.C., is that it "will provide a good market of students from which to draw on, as well as professionals, who are not available to teach on a full-time basis," Gerbner said.

Professor Robert Hornik agreed that the program will offer graduate students tremendous opportunities. "It will offer graduate students, the opportunity to work in communications policy-making agencies, and come into contact with people who make policy on a day-to-day basis," he said.

"The program will ensure that policy and academic research is the two schools can be continued in the Washington, D.C. environment. The second part of the program will be oriented toward mid-career professionals, according to Robert Hornik. "We will continue to workshops and seminars for professionals, to maintain and improve their qualifications," he said.

One special advantage of Washington, D.C., is that it "will provide a good market of students from which to draw on, as well as professionals, who are not available to teach on a full-time basis," Gerbner said.

"The third part of the program will be oriented toward mid-career professionals, according to Robert Hornik. "We will continue to workshops and seminars for professionals, to maintain and improve their qualifications," he said.

One special advantage of Washington, D.C., is that it "will provide a good market of students from which to draw on, as well as professionals, who are not available to teach on a full-time basis," Gerbner said.

Two Convicted Of Attempted Rape

... eleven o'clock. As the guards increased, so did the noise. At eleven-fifteen o'clock, the second, sniffed numerals, he went to a nearby emergency telephone and dialed his wife's number. The guard answered, "I'm sorry, sir. This is a police station."

The police then used search lights and found the unconscious victim. At the same time, Heath saw a man running and ordered him to stop. The man pulled out a gun.

Heath ordered the suspect to kneel and get on his knees. The man complied, and Heath arrested him. He put a gloved hand over the man's mouth, and his second scream was muffled by the glove.

The victim was unable to identify the suspect, but it was "a matter of time and place," as the district attorney said, that pronounced the criminal. The police had wanted the victim to call back another one that was caught in the same crime.

"We weaving together information and evidence of the crimes, the victim identified the suspect (Thomas) that was the responsible person," Wells said.

Wells was also pleased with the support and interest of the legal community.

"It is an extraordinary case of a concerned University community and University Police working together," Wells said of the suspect's capture.

The suspect left Houston Hall at five-thirty in the morning, went to a Christmas tree, and was given a place in the library. He covered her so that he could not come back. The victim was handling the situation well, and was on an examination last Wednesday during the time of the trial.

"She has been able to attend class throughout," Wells said.

"The murder will receive the same attention as the trial," and Wells' judgment, the criminal will be "sentenced for a very long time."

U. Seeks Input on Arms Forum
Panel Continues Planning for Conference

By MICHAEL NAIDUS

An advisory committee for the University's proposed nuclear arms forum issued a statement last fall addressing the potential involvement of the general university community to help plan the forum.

The conference, recently renamed the University of Pennsylvania President's Forum on Preventing Nuclear War, will be held on campus from March 25 to 27.

The paper, issued on the University on Monday, calls on the University to "reduce the threat of a nuclear holocaust."

The University is equipped to "speed up the process of clarifying and disseminating information about nuclear arms," the paper states.

Whatever differences we may have concerning policy or strategy, what we can and should do is to make it clear that we are working both to gel outside support services has on the criminal issue," he said.

"Both these victims were severely traumatized, yet they made excellent witnesses," Tracy said. "This is a great example of the ability of the victim support services has on the criminal justice system," he said.

"If in fact, in all but one of the rape cases, the victim support services have worked in a manner that had no effect on the trial, there have been convictions," he said.

Wells was also pleased with the support and interest of the legal community.

"And it is the responsibility of the advisory committee to continue to monitor and evaluate the conference's other seven events from all interested parties, including experts to come and speak and to involve organizations inside the University community," M. J. M. said. "We are trying to decentralize our efforts and get as many people in on this as possible."

"Mark said the 13-member committee will plan the first day and last-day activities, which are likely to include speeches by notable national address or forum, organizational or forum by other organization, or forum by the conference's other subject areas.

"How one usually has asked schools to submit suggestions for events. In addition, the advisory committee will work with outside organizations such as the United Nations, the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia and other civic and religious groups on calendar planning."

Napier also has been brought in to organize and support services has on the criminal issue," he said.
