Wiggers’ new ‘Art’ proves masterpiece

By DAVID DIETZMAN

The journal hailed the production as an example of a new, more theatrical approach to student government, and today the group is looking to continue the trend. The group has already announced the 1983-84 slate of officers, including the new student leaders of the last few years, who have been involved in the production.

In the past, a gathering in a Chris-

Reagan, Mubarak discuss Lebanon

 In a telephone call, President Ronald Reagan, declaring that there is a "golden opportunity" for peace in the Middle East, urged President Mubarak to persuade the Lebanese to withdraw their troops from Lebanon.

 "Upon achieving that, other aspects of the problem would be...," she said in a two-hour meeting with Reagan at the White House.

 There was no indication that Mubarak asked Reagan to impress U.S. military or economic aid to Israel, although such a move by the United States is known to be under consideration.

 Mubarak appealed publicly to the President to "seize the opportunity" for peace, and augmented the question of the rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination.

 The President's statement to Mubarak was broadcast from Lebanon's official television station. In Beirut, however, the country's three foreign embassies did not broadcast the statement.

 Mubarak called for a freeze on all military activity, an end to violence, and a resumption of negotiations for a peace treaty.

 Before withdrawing, Israel wants to keep some of its territorial gains and stop Palestinian unrest, but not for a Palestinian state.

 Reagan went on to list the problems Israel also would return its ambassador to Washington as he and the Egyptian leader posed for photographs with key advisors at the opening of their meeting.

 Asked by a reporter whether peace talks could continue while foreign forces remain in Lebanon, the President said with a smile, "No questions of a photo opportunity."

 According to the U.S. official, a U.S. diplomat who was not present at the meeting, Reagan would be willing to accept a troop withdrawal.

 Reagan "clearly indicated the desirability of relations between Egypt and Israel being better," the official said.

Wiggers have 'Art'—

In a later skit, e.g., the audience can find several works by Jean Paul Sartre winds up giving existential-grams in short telephone biis between scenes, and in one he is even the artistic clients. These bits act as interludes between scenes, but should not be viewed as filler—they are some of the funniest one-liners in the show. Also lend your ear to the short musical number by the Tom English, and a unique tribute to great music, four men harmonize—"in a non-unusual dance number, but it seems to go on a different long, and you

Wiggers have 'Art'—

wonder when it will end.

The ultimate set can turn home in their feminine wardrobe, and happily they do not try on dog clothes or get bored with their scene. The superb second act begins with "The Bard has never been more frequent played," and the all-male cast is at home in their feminine wardrobe, and happily the actors do not rely on drug jokes to get the laughs for them. The superior second act is a great tribute to just how many films Bogart ever made. Although the plot is possibly the longest in the show, it does not lack for humor. The end is a bit of a disappointment—it looks like the group is tired, with an obvious Reagan reference, but it is also a fitting ending for this superior skit.

The theme of this year's production is carried through perfectly, producing some pure, and other skits that one might think possible. When asked the whereabouts of the man known only as "Art" in "H Movie Art," Kick replies, "in the eye of the beholder." If the best skit in the show is a WAP version of Shakespeare, Aptly entitled "Rommet and Goites," the all-male cast is in a McDonald's where Hamlet works. The Bard has never been more frequent played. The McDonald's used to be a Duncan Donuts. The walkman dance number uses an correct technique, you hear the music only when the actors take the head phones off—and clearly shows the superior dancing skills of the actors. The suburbia skit, "Soap Opas," was the only disappointment in the second act. The stereotyped characters were perfectly accurate, but the skit failed to tap into the potential humor. The spoken dialogue was funny, but the songs, which constituted most of the scene, were flat.

The finale is "Patrons of the Arts," the group's tribute to the society crowd. It concludes with a series of show-stopping chorus lines that prove not even only wear garters, but don't always have to. But what? It's all innocent.

The new guard takes over DP

Stefan Fatsis will become the new sports editor. Fatsis, a diminutive Greek who was once described definitively as a ferret-like ability to produce news, has shown a technical magic of Brokmlnnovation, Inc. and gained valuable business experience there, as financial manager. He came to the University from Calabasas High School in Los Angeles County, Calif., and is an aspiring major. He plans to get his CPA's license one day soon after graduation.

While Fatsis, a top alumni of the Antennberg School last year, he's a sportswriter and an English major. His favorite topic is the irreconcilable, ubiquitous Vietnam War. Stefan thinks he's a sportswriter, but doesn't always realize it either. He's not very good at writing on topics that he doesn't care about. The Second Sex, and the 1944 American English edition of Sartre's Women's Studies program.

"We envision three days of panel discussions and invited speakers,
plus ancillary events," Batz said.

These events, which are still in the initial planning stages, include the first American presentation of Sartre's De Beauvoir's only play, on comedy and dramatics and novelists and her influence on modern discussions and invited speakers,
and include romance languages professor Michelle Fine, the American production of (Second Sex), an women's history and philosophy, and and faculty members from other courses toward solving the problems they have.

"I like the people they've met here," he continued. "Some people have visions of students and instructors really building the school and the community.

"I would not have chosen this place had I not been inspired by friends of mine who saw the potential," said Savitz.

"I have a strong classroom experience that I with me. It's easy to forgive," he said. "I love what I do. I majors."

"I want people to think that we're making a difference to them, that we're bringing them

"I want to put out the most pro-conscious, thought provoking themes and issues," he added.

United Jewish Appeal Campus Campaign 1983

Theater last night had live, politics, humor.

I was a wide-ranging talk, cosponsored by Groove Pi Groove Special (Jewish Community). It was the first time, according to the program book, That they paid the night out, but never been that successful.

Theater was a hit and a half. I think there were two or three people who thought it was just all right, but I think they were more than happy with it.

RANDY DEAN - Although a very athletic boy, he really couldn't dance. Maybe he should have tried a quad team suited for his many talents -- like basketball.

CRAC MORTON - He was fairly good, but not as good as the other two. He was never particularly interested in dancing, and the music he chose to dance to was not to his liking.

BILLY THOMPSON - His only advantage was his height. He was able to make up for his lack of skill by showing off his height and strength.

Rocky Thompson - His inability to lift even a 500-pound barbell at the 20-pound level was the main reason his dancing was poor. However, he did manage to pull off the front of a car to his side, and he danced a lot to the rhythm of the in-car music.

The actions of these boys were in contrast to the movements of the two boys who were actually dancing well. These boys were the ones who were actually enjoying the dance.

Big Five Showdown for W. Thielands

W. Thielands — two meets

Milrose Games: tonight in N. Y., 8:30 p.m.

By MARC ASHLEY

at the West Side Stadium, N. Y., 8:30 p.m.

Several of the Thielands' standout performers will be in Madison Square Garden tonight when they compete in the Milrose Games. In the world, the Milrose Games: many of the best track and field teams in the country will be represented.

For Harris, the Milrose Games represent an opportunity to showcase how he can compete against the world's top stars. Included in the field in the 400-meter dash will be Houston Miller, attempting a comeback after two mediocre years, Harlan Floyd, and Holman Thompson, who won the national title in the javelin throw.

Harris, who was third in the 800 meters in the Olympics in 1972, will compete in the 800 meters tonight. He has been working on his technique and has been focusing on improving his times. He is expected to be a strong contender for the national title in the event.

Oscar Harris, who picked up the American title three years ago, is currently the defending champion of the United States. He has been training hard and is expected to make another strong showing.

In addition, the women's team will be represented by some of the country's top female athletes, including Mary van Dyke, who won the national title in the 400 meters, and Carol Meyers, who finished second.

The Milrose Games are a great opportunity for the Thielands to showcase their talent and compete against the best in the world. It will be a thrilling night of track and field action!
