Hackney refuses to alter Army policy

By DAVID GOODHARDT
Professor Walter Paul, Hackney's acting president, refused to reconsider his policy permitting the Army ROTC on campus.

Hackney said last night he told members of the Law School student government that student protests alone would not induce him to remove the program. "I told them I would not be moved by arguments, nor numbers of student protest," Hackney said.

Five members of the Law School Student Association, Committee on the Military, requested an emergency meeting with Hackney on the question of whether the ROTC program is a "threat to the academic environment." The group was informed that Hackney would not consider the request.

The students maintained that the Army's research-oriented university violates the university's non-discrimination guidelines.

"I am concerned that the institution would have no meaning to me if were to reconcile my policy," Professor Paul said.

"This is not verifiable until we get the documents," Paul said.

Sparer said that at a recent meeting of college officials, the Army had not been involved in any recruitment process, but that all were interested in maintaining the program in the future.

"We maintain that the University's position could affect the president's decision," Hoberman said.

"We believe that the University should be more concerned about the effect of the ROTC on the College and the University," Hoberman said.

"None of the three students who have expressed concern with the policy, the statement said.

The statement added that Hakney told the students that his policy was based in part on threats that the Defense Department would spend "un-funded" employment centers on the campus if the policy was not changed. The statement also noted that the University should not permit such policies on its campus. The statement said that Hakney's decision was based on the "right to use the University's property and facilities as the University wishes to use them."

Students ring up month's mark for annual telethon

By Dr. Henry Ehren

Beginning this Monday, the annual Business Building telethon will be underway.

This year's Undergraduate Annual Giving Campaign will take place over the next two weeks. Beginning tonight, students from all parts of the campus will phone alumni in an effort to attract donations to the University.

The program continues through February 28th. For those interested in participating, the Business Building will be open each day between 8:00 a.m. and 6:00 p.m. There will be training that will describe the role of the student callers and the overall theme of Friday's basketball game at the Spectrum.

One of the biggest challenges of the telethon has been to attract the alumni, the year organizers hope for an even larger turnout. To attract the callers, the organizers have arranged separate categories for a variety of prizes. Favors come complete in a separate category.

College Sophomore Felicia Cohen, this year's Undergraduate Annual Giving Campaign director, said that the purpose of the telethon is to call West coast alumni between 4-8 p.m. for the opening weekend. Last year as part of a group called the Qualifiers - who earned the most points and won the non-territory divisions - Cohen said she learned that the Annual Giving is a rewarding way for students to help the University, where you live, and give back to the University, where you attended.

"It's a lot of fun," she said last week. "You get to talk to alumni, and you want a lot of people."

Indeed, many students said they had enjoyed working the non-territory divisions. "I felt that it was important to make sure that students were aware of the importance of the annual campaign," said Cohen. "We wouldn't be able to do it without them." He added. "We would be able to do it without their assistance."

"I like to talk to people, and the alumni are fun," she said. "They like their university. A lot of times they would ask how things are going at the University, where you live, things like that."

The alumni said that length of the conversation is a key factor. Whistle mouthed Jeff Cohen said that he was particularly interested in the phone, because the chances of alumni being made.

"If you keep them on the phone for awhile, you can use the offline options," he said.

Cohen said that he found more recent graduates reluctant to pledge. "I ask them for five dollars, and they might say yes," he said.

"Now they can see that, but maybe they have had future plans for the school," he added.

"It depends upon the age," he continued. "If they are over 40, they are more amenable to giving, or even raising their pledges."

Whistles senior Tom Banks, who was one of the most successful callers last year, made about $6000 calls. He and a fellow Student College House alumni called to six hours each night for the week.

This year's annual telethon will offer a budget of $30,000 to the student callers, the organizers hope to repeat their success. Cohen, a member of Phi Kappa Alpha, who was the individual points winner last year, said he attributed his success to performance and prizes available, which enabled him to make the most calls.

"If I was to try to list the easiest were to get pledge-, I would say that the easiest were to get pledge-. "I got a good deal with alumni as well as students," he said. "I got a good deal with alumni as well as students." He added.

Cohen said he found more recent graduates reluctant to pledge. "It's tough on the young graduates. You ask them for five dollars, and they might say yes," he said.

"I tell them that we have had future plans for the school," he added.

"Laws Without Morals," a student activist group, states without morals are in vain. It is in the University milieu. It appears on the cover of every letter that is printed at University presses, stating, "In the course of work that the University is pursuing, it is incumbent upon the Board of Trustees to see that the world that is in its service." The following is an open letter to the Trustees of the University.

Dear members of the Board of Trustees,

I write to you today about the Solomon Amendment, which requires institutions of higher education to provide information on the rights of military recruiters. This amendment has been met with widespread opposition, including from many student groups, who believe it violates the First Amendment rights of students and faculties.

The amendment requires educational institutions to provide information on military recruiters, including the right to military service, the financial benefits available, and the duties of military service. This information is to be provided to all students, including those who may not be interested in military service. The amendment also requires institutions to allow military recruiters to access certain information about students, such as their academic and financial records.

We, as students, are concerned about the implications of this amendment. We believe that it infringes on our rights to privacy and freedom of expression. It forces us to provide information that we may not want to, and it gives military recruiters access to information that is sensitive and personal.

Furthermore, we are concerned about the impact of this amendment on our ability to educate ourselves about the military. Military recruiters often come to our campus and speak to us about the military, but we feel that this information is often biased and one-sided. We believe that we should be able to learn about the military from a variety of sources, not just those that are endorsed by the military.

We urge you, as members of the Board of Trustees, to consider the implications of this amendment carefully. We believe that it infringes on our rights to privacy and freedom of expression, and it forces us to provide information that we may not want to. We also believe that it may negatively impact our ability to learn about the military in a balanced and fair manner.

Thank you for your attention to this issue.

Sincerely,

According to the spokesman, the man then approached another student who was nearby and also asked her for money. When the student refused to give the man money, the spokesman said, one of them grabbed a knife, and they attacked the student, demanding that he give up his wallet. The man said he grabbed the knife and cut the suspect's pants to get to his wallet.

The man then pushed the student to the ground and tried to take the student's wallet. The student quickly stood up and fled toward Hill House.

Police said that the two men first stepped onto one of the students and asked for money. He said the student immediately ran toward Hill House, escaping from the men.

He said the student told them that he was a student at Drexel University.

As the student was walking from 37th and Walnut Streets, a man and a woman approached him. The suspect used a knife to cut the student's pants to get to his wallet. The Look of Love

Heartwarming traditions mark Valentine’s Day

Many scholars maintain that St. Valentine’s Day had nothing to do with Saint Valentine, but that the holiday actually evolved from the medieval belief that birds choose their mates on February 14th. Valentine’s Day may also have originated from the ancient Roman feast of Lupercus, the god who looked after sheep and their flocks. As part of the celebration, Romans would draw the names of potential mates from a bag and accept the gift of a love token for a year.

One Christian version has St. Valentine, a Roman priest martyred in 270AD, giving his name to the holiday in his memory. The custom, the first man a girl saw on Valentine’s Day, was said to become more serious later in the century. In another custom, the first man a girl saw on Valentine’s Day was written on a sheet of paper. When Claudius discovered this, he threw Valentine and his companions into a dungeon. Valentine was later transferred to a more comfortable cell and restored to good health. On the eve of his execution, he sent his love a farewell letter. The letter was given to her, her mother, and restored to the priest. One day, he realized that the love token was written on his name, and he asked for the gift of love for a year.

The holiday can be tough. In another custom, the first man a girl saw on Valentine’s Day was her future husband, she might dream of her love in the future. When Claudius discovered this, he ordered Valentine to be executed. However, the love token was written on his name, and he asked for the gift of love for a year. Valentine was later transferred to a more comfortable cell and restored to good health. On the eve of his execution, he sent his love a farewell letter. The letter was given to her, her mother, and restored to the priest. One day, he realized that the love token was written on his name, and he asked for the gift of love for a year.

The Inter fraternity Council has canceled the mid-winter dance to be held next Saturday, March 19. IFC Secretary Bob Kramer said last night that the IFC Executive Council decided to cancel the event following a meeting held on Monday night.

The event was scheduled for next Saturday, January 15, at 10 p.m., in the Medical Education Building. The IFC originally budgeted $4000 for the dance, but the money was used for another event.

"There was a lot of money involved, and we didn't have the time," Kramer continued. "Approximately 300 people went last year, so we didn't have the minimum time needed to avoid financial problems."

"The event was something we needed to cancel without any financial considerations, but we had no choice," Kramer added.

"It would have taken a little more advanced planning for the event, but we had to cancel it," Kramer said. "We really didn't have more than we needed."

"There won't be any more tickets sold," Kramer said. "But if we go for a week or two, we may get them."

Student to speak on visit to El Salvador

The Student to speak on El Salvador is John Stanbury, a leading expert on Latin America and the local chapter of the University of Edinburgh.

Stanbury, a member of the 1982 Public Health Commission of Inquiry to El Salvador, Middlebury last month investigated health care and human rights in the country. He says his work includes expert in the fields of health and medicine, such as the University Medical School.

The presentation is part of the student's ongoing efforts to educate people about the reported health care and human rights in El Salvador. Middlebury is the only public health commission which allowed for sales until the day of the dance, which is the possibility of the event.

Middlebury is also holding a student's event on Tuesday, February 15, in the Medical Education Building. The event will be held at 3:00 p.m. in the Medical Education Building. The event will be held at 3:00 p.m. in the Medical Education Building.

"We need human rights information in deep in the society that there is an overall disrepair of human life and a complete breakdown in the health system," he said.

Middlebury is asking the students to speak in advance of the event, which is required for the event. "I think it's a good idea, and it could be pulled off. There was no way it couldn't be done."

Middlebury is also holding a student's event on Tuesday, February 15, in the Medical Education Building. The event will be held at 3:00 p.m. in the Medical Education Building.

Big Ivy sweeps for the fencing teams

Men improve to 5-2

By JOE SPENDELE

For Notre Dame it was like a dream, for Mike Milano it was just a nightmare.

Both fencers were involved in the last two hours in the Irish-Foxes match over the weekend. It was the second upset of the season for the iris men's fencing team, which dropped Friday's 44-5 to Foxes. And though fencers from both teams were down and out, both sides had plenty of positives to take away from the weekend.

"I think we've learned a lot," said Milano, a freshman. "I know he'd have been angry and come back stronger."

The week opened with a loss in a -university situation matches differently. The program's chance for representation may have been over for this season, but the feeling was that the boys' performance was an indication of things to come.

As for Milano, he said that "we're all just so happy to be here for this season." The fries went on to handily defeat the Bears 22-15, bringing their season record to 5-2.

"We were all over her and never let her off the hook," added Milano. "And I'm going to keep playing her."

The concept of keeping her from getting to her was the key to beating her.

The fries-Fuhrman match itself didn't get started. The Quakers went on to win 1-0 against the Bears 14-2.

"We're not sure if she's going to be back," said Penn's captain P.J. Power. "That's something we're going to have to look into.""

Penn guards a well-kept secret

The word had gotten around: "Keep Penn's treasured and valuable secrets to yourself."

"We have been successful, thus far, because we have been able to keep our opponents guessing and thus, unable to prepare for different defenses. Our ability to keep the ball moving is one of our most respected attributes. The secret formula will remain a surprise," Penn coach Craig Littlepage has said, and not many have been able to keep up with the Quakers.

"It goes without saying, but Karl and Mike, in particular, are doing a good job and shooting the ball with confidence." -- Coach Littlepage

The Quakers had two of their three points on the wing, and gel into the up-tempo game against the Crimson and Big Green this season. Against these same two teams on Harvard last season, against these same two teams on Harvard last season. Rather, it had been anxiously

Penn basketball had been stagnant in the last two or three games. We haven't been scoring enough points to keep the ball moving, thus missing the opportunities to get shots to fall. We've had the opportunity to put away Dartmouth, but both contributed to boost the offense. The only way we've been able to put up enough points is by scoring after the break. The only way we've been able to put up enough points is through the ability to keep the ball moving and shooting the ball with confidence.

The guards' scoring outburst coincided with the team's improved offensive attack, with Oliphant and Littlepage leading the way.
