The George Koval, president of the Mu Phi Eta chapter at the University, said last night that he feels the resolution is unfair and discriminatory recruiting policies.

"I've known a successful prosecution and have seen cases that went to trial," she said. "I don't think there was anything wrong with the woman's actions, but if there was, I would not have acted otherwise."

The resolution was drafted by the board of directors, and it was presented to the members of the advisory board.

The board, which includes faculty members, students, and alumni, was concerned about the resolution, and it was discussed at a recent meeting.

"The board felt that the resolution was necessary in order to prevent discriminatory recruiting practices," said a member of the board. "We want to ensure that our members are treated fairly and with respect."

The resolution calls for the establishment of a committee to investigate any instances of discriminatory recruiting.

"We will work with the university to ensure that our members are treated fairly," said the board president. "We want to make sure that our organization is inclusive and welcoming to all."

Security tight for Pope in El Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador Pope John Paul II leaves New York City today for Lima, Peru and will arrive in El Salvador this afternoon. The Pope’s trip to the Central American country is expected to be a difficult one. The United States-backed government of El Salvador is facing a major national election this weekend, and the Pope has expressed concern about the safety of his visit. The Salvadoran government has been accused of human rights abuses, including extrajudicial killings and torture.

Amnesty International guards rights in Salvador

Amnesty International has called on the United States government to ensure the safety of the Pope during his visit to El Salvador. The organization has received reports of human rights abuses in the country, including extrajudicial killings and the harassment of journalists. Amnesty International has urged the Salvadoran government to respect the rights of all citizens and to ensure the safety of all those who will attend the Pope’s visit.

The University of Pennsylvania’s Student Senate has voted to ban a speech by a controversial speaker, saying that the event would not be in line with the university’s mission to foster open dialogue and academic freedom. The student government has faced criticism from some members of the university community, who have accused it of censoring speech.

UA members count election ballots

The University of Pennsylvania’s Student Senate has convened a special meeting to count the results of the student government’s elections. The meeting was called after the original tabulation process was deemed to be flawed. Members of the Senate have voted to recount the ballots to ensure that the results accurately reflect the will of the student body.

Tenure decision sends English prof a pink slip

By DONALD WATKIN

The University has sent English Professor Walter Harpham his Pink Slip. The final action of the Personnel Committee last week to deny tenure to Harpham, a 15-year veteran of the English Department at Penn, marked the end of a bitter battle over tenure and promotions at the University of the past two years.

Harpham's struggle to gain tenure is a microcosm of the battles many faculty professors have fought in recent years to win tenure. In the case of Professor Harpham, the campus is divided into those who believe he deserves tenure and those who feel he doesn't.

A brief résumé of Harpham's career shows that he has always been an excellent teacher and scholar, with a reputation for being one of the best teachers in the English Department. He has published several books and articles on contemporary American literature, and has been a member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters since 1966.

Harpham was born in 1920 in New York City, where he attended public schools. He received his B.A. from Columbia University in 1942 and his Ph.D. from the University of California at Berkeley in 1950. After serving in the Army during World War II, he returned to academia and began teaching at Penn in 1949.

Harpham has been a member of the English Department faculty for 15 years, during which time he has taught courses in contemporary American literature, creative writing, and the social sciences. He has also served on numerous University committees and has been active in the University Senate.

The personnel committee's decision to deny Harpham tenure ended a bitter battle that began in the fall of 1972 when Harpham submitted his application for tenure. The committee conducted a thorough review of Harpham's dossier, but ultimately recommended against tenure.

Harpham appealed the committee's decision to the provost, who then recommended against tenure. Harpham then appealed to the University Senate, which upheld the committee's decision.

Harpham's case has been a cause célèbre on the Penn campus, and has attracted national attention. The battle over Harpham's tenure has been seen as a symbol of the larger struggle between the University administration and the faculty over the university's policies on tenure and promotion.

Harpham's case has also been used as a platform for larger issues, including the role of the University administration in shaping faculty careers, the importance of academic freedom, and the value of tenure as a safeguard for academic freedom.

Harpham has always maintained that he is not seeking tenure as a right, but as a symbol of the University's commitment to academic freedom. He has been quoted as saying, "I believe that tenure is an important symbol of academic freedom, and that it is important for the University to support that freedom.

Harpham's case has also been seen as a symbol of the decline of academic freedom in recent years. The battle over Harpham's tenure has been seen as a battle over the University's commitment to academic freedom, and the struggle has been seen as a battle over the future of the University.

The University administration has been criticized for its handling of the Harpham case, and has been accused of not taking the case seriously enough. The administration has been accused of being more concerned with maintaining the University's good name than with upholding the principles of academic freedom.

The University administration has also been criticized for its handling of other tenure cases, and has been accused of being more concerned with maintaining the University's good name than with upholding the principles of academic freedom.

The battle over Harpham's tenure has been seen as a symbol of the larger struggle between the University administration and the faculty over the university's policies on tenure and promotion. The battle has been seen as a battle between the University administration and the faculty over the University's commitment to academic freedom.
A Successful Struggle

To the Editor,

I appreciate the Daily Pennsylvanian's coverage of the incident at Washington Hall on Friday night. The administration should recognize the student response to this incident as a tuitionUART. I agree that the University should not be taxed to pay for the repairs.

Sincerely yours,

Some Stimulating Thoughts

To the Editor,

The image of a University is the sum of its parts. It is more than just the buildings and the people who populate them. It is the sum of the experiences that are had on campus. The University is a place where ideas are exchanged and challenged. It is a place where students are encouraged to think critically and to question the status quo.

The image of a University is not only shared by the students, but also by the faculty and staff. They too are a vital part of the University community. Their contributions are essential to the success of the University. They are the ones who teach, who research, who serve. They are the ones who make the University what it is.

The image of a University is also shared by the alumni. They are the ones who have been here before us. They are the ones who have shaped the University in their own ways. They are the ones who have helped to make the University what it is today.

The image of a University is not just a static entity. It is constantly evolving. It is changing and adapting to the needs of the times. It is a living, breathing entity that is always growing and always learning.

Sincerely yours,

PPU leaders call for UA probe
Misuse of funds by assembly treasurer alleged

B. D. SCHAEFER
Political Science chairman called by UA Council for probe of misuse of funds last spring.

A statement signed by the presidents of the two conservative, moderate, liberal and liberal panjatani parties of the PPU says the police investigation may be the only direct connection to the allegations against the undergraduate treasurer of the UA.

"There is no all-encompassing evidence against Ed. I believe that he has an all-encompassing case made against Ed and I am some public official at the UA," said that Ed was not accused of one grand larceny, but alleged he was found guilty of two of that same thing may be going on in the case of Ed," he said.

"This could turn into a federal case," Schaefer said that Schaefer was not available for comment.

UA Chairman Vic Wefeld said that Schaefer said that Schaefer did not want to comment on the case. "We have to try to find out how much Ed has stolen from the UA and what the treasurer had charged," the statement reads.

"It's our concern that the individual was misused for the UA's financial good fortune," he said.

The statement was released yesterday by Wefeld and Samuel Lager said last night that a total of six students have reported to the treasurer's office in the past month in a student government conference.

"The treasurer is free to return any audited funds, if it is believed that there could be a bias in Ed's is the truth," said Lager. "I believe that there is a bias in Ed's account, if it is believed that he can be involved with the treasurer's office.

"We have been unable to contact him," Lager said. "We have been unable to contact him because we have not been able to contact him.

"It is our concern that the individual was misused for the UA's financial good fortune," he said.

1. The treasurer, Robert Speal said last night that he will have the statement signed in the name of the treasurer, Robert Speal. The statement, however, is not available for comment.

"It's very important for people to know that if they don't have cash before they get into trouble," he said.

"Detectives at Student Health Service are looking into the situation as a matter of course," Wefeld said. "I believe that Schaefer did not want to comment."

Bellamy speaks at conference

By NANCY KROWN

New York City Council President Carol Bellamy spoke Saturday at the Law School in support of a student campaign for women in the labor force.

Bellamy, the keynote speaker at a conference sponsored by the Women's Legal Action Network, said that "The movement has seen times of disappointment, some days it is growing and taking deeper root." Bellamy told the approximately 130 people who attended the conference that Bellamy special education is to show what women are still missing lower paying and inadequate wages.

"The movement has seen times of disappointment, some days it is growing and taking deeper root," Bellamy said. "Today there is no limit to what they can achieve."

Bellamy called for policies which would provide aid for women who do the same job as men.

"Women's wages are generally less than men's, and the disparity is getting larger," she said. "Women earn approximately 60 percent of what men earn, and the average woman spends less than the average wage of a male worker about that size." One reason for this is the fact that of women who work are employed in fields which are predominantly female, and therefore offer higher wages.

"The question more deserves the one million Bellamy asked.

She also advocated the legal for women's rights through litigation and education. Bellamy termed the importance of women starting new technology and saw the public to recognize the need for better labor law and flexibility in hiring, salary and child care issues.

The need for partial education and the cost of an education may be considered when discovering the gap at work women's earnings are not equal to men's.

"The economic issue is important to the women's movement," she said. "We must do something to improve the disparity, and it is making another major step forward." Bellamy said that she was supporting Han for president.

The reaction to Bellamy's speech was overwhelming positive and supportive. Law School Placement Director Helen Clark commented on the popularity of the labor force. "The economic issue is important to the women's movement," she said. "We must do something to improve the disparity, and it is making another major step forward." Bellamy said that she was supporting Han for president.

The rest were just people who are interested in finding out more about issues," Brown said. "We are here to support the campaign.

The students were learning a lot.

"We're mainly just trying to get a handle on the campaign," Brown said. "We're getting organized right now. It's definitely starting for next year." Brown said that the campaign would attempt to educate students about the tactics of the candidates.

"We want to be the first students to support a woman for president," he said.

"We're supporting Han because of her support for student financial aid," Brown said.

McConnell wins squash title
Sophomore repeats as collegiate champion

B. THOM DUNNETT
The outcome was never in doubt.
If you-association had known
how Penn's Melissa McConnell was playing in the national championships in November, no one would have doubted her upset expectations, but had been fitted with high expectations and,
prepared for the challenge, the Penn Quakers would not repeat as NCAA champions.

It was a harsh reality for the Quakers
when the 11th-seeded Cornell team faced up to the challenge and upset number two seed Penn
in the NCAA championships.

The match was a testament to the senior leadership of the Quakers and proved to be quite an ordeal.

McConnell, who had won the national title in 1986, faced a strong challenge in the form of a-very新鲜 Powerful and aggressive player from California, who had just won the national title in the junior class.

The match was a hard-fought one,
but in the end, McConnell emerged victorious, winning 15-12, 15-9.

This win was not only a personal accomplishment for McConnell,
but also a team achievement,
as the Quakers won the collegiate title with a 5-0 victory.

McConnell's win was a significant achievement for the Quakers, who had previously been beaten by Cornell in the NCAA finals.
