U. to inspect residences for asbestos

To a number of its critics, the U. at Urbana-Champaign has been accused of being "soft" on asbestos, claiming that its presence in the building is not serious enough to warrant action. However, the university has issued a statement saying that it will conduct a thorough inspection of all residences on campus to ensure the safety of its students.

The statement said that "the university is committed to providing a safe and healthy environment for all students," and that "asbestos is a known carcinogen and steps will be taken to remove it from all residences that are found to contain it." The university has also said that it will provide updates on the progress of the inspection and that students will be notified if they are affected.

The inspection will be conducted by trained personnel who will use specialized equipment to detect asbestos, and the results will be reported to the appropriate authorities. The university has also said that it will take all necessary steps to prevent further asbestos exposure and to prevent any future occurrences.

The statement added that "the university is committed to ensuring that all residences on campus are safe and healthy," and that "students will be kept informed of the progress of the inspection and any actions that will be taken to address any asbestos problems."

Spring Break

"I love the concept of the whole family staying at a beach house," said freshman Joanne Greenspan.

"Spring break is my favorite vacation time," the College freshman said. "As an athlete, I'm looking forward to relaxing from the pounding I've been taking.

"I'll be good to get back, relax and spend some time alone," she added. "I'll be home in April and I want to take advantage of the weather in Miami."

"It's really a great time," he said. "It's also a really good value for the money."

The Newspaper of the Pennsylvania State University

University Park, Pa., March 11, 1985

For more of the room allocations, see "对学生的房间分配", which has been determined to be under the university's jurisdiction. The charge that the missed funds during a recent test of a new program is in which line of the university's projects, was made by an official who did not have a specific issue.

The Daily Pennsylvanian acknowledges that the issue was brought before the Daily Pennsylvanian editorial board with the hope of a positive resolution. However, the student who had been under the impression that the issue was not a minor one and would not allow any discussion of the matter.

The Daily Pennsylvanian is an independent, student-run newspaper. We welcome letters to the editor and are always looking for new voices to contribute to the conversation.

Please note that this is the first issue of the Daily Pennsylvanian in which we have included the "Letters to the Editor" section. We hope that this will encourage more student participation and engagement with the content of the newspaper.

Cheers,

Ehrlich, dental group to meet on tuition rise

DENTAL GROUP

Dental School students and parents call meet with President Ehrlich on Saturday to discuss a potential tuition increase at the University of Pennsylvania Dental School.

Student Council Committee on High Tuition increase has prepared a list of questions and topics for the meeting, which will occur over the next week.

Student Council President Walter Russo, who will attend the meeting, said that students, who feel that their college is losing its public service mission, are causing students to reconsider their decisions.

"We're meeting with administration to get some clarification on this," Russo said. He added that the administration has prepared a list of questions and topics for the meeting, which will occur over the next week.

"We're on the same page about this," Russo said. "We're all concerned about the financial state of the university."
Protest condemns sexual abuse

Fraternity brothers join in rally against violence

By ANNS B. BURLESON

Exce[use for the person who ran good books. I George should have been in the tele-embellished rally's drive to prevent violence aga-against presence known salaries.

Among the 400 people who attended the rally, a number of students and faculty members gathered outside the school to show their support for the event. Some attendees came to hear the speakers talk about the issues of violence, while others came to support the cause.

The rally was organized by the fraternities and sororities on campus. The event was held in response to the recent cases of sexual abuse on campus.

Several speakers talked about the importance of preventing violence and supporting each other. They emphasized the need for community support and the role of everyone in addressing the issue.

The rally was well-attended, with a large crowd gathered on the steps of the school. The speakers called for action and encouraged people to take a stand against violence.

The event was a success in raising awareness about the issue of sexual abuse and promoting community support. The attendees left with a sense of solidarity and a commitment to taking action against violence.

U. to dedicate center
on chemistry history

Inauguration will coincide with the 250th anniversary of the birth of Joseph Priestley, the 18th Century English chemist who discovered om-ium. Priestley was a free-thinker and scientist who found revelations in chemistry.

Two Nobel Prize Laureates in Chemistry will receive honorary degrees at the ceremony — Glenn Stebbins, who discovered Plutonium, and Sir George Porter, a member of the Royal Academy of Science.
In addition, Professor Emeritus Charles Pfeiffer of the University of Pennsylvania, who is a University Professor Christian Anti-son will speak at the ceremony.

President Sheldon Hackney and American Chemical Society President
Fred Broido will present the degrees.
Leaders from chemical companies, including Dupont and Dow, will also be present to attend the fine meeting of the ceremony.

The inaugural program will include presentations on recent topics in chemistry and will conclude tonight with a gala dinner.

After the announcement, when questioned, Klingsberg said he did not know what the incident was or when it occurred.

"I was not taken off the air because he was making a political statement," Klingsberg said. "I was taken off the air because the station had a series of public service messages that ranged from blood donation in veteran disease clinics, but that someone at the station can have a policy on the air by public address, 'We have a policy on the air by public address,' he said. "I have the right to make one."

"I never took a side of the issue," he added. "I don't have the right to make one."

"It's something we have to deal with," he said. "I don't have the right to make one."

Penn basketball heads south for spring

BY JOHN DELLA PIANA

The Philadelphia Quakers never give you down, the tradition of basketball is repeated time and time again. They hoist the ball up high and send it to the rim, where it's caught and the game begins. The Quakers have made it to the NCAA tournament and are still in the mix for a spot. They're on a roll and will look to continue their success when they head south for the spring tournament.

The schedule is tough for Penn, as they will play against some of the top teams in the nation. The Quakers are looking to prove that they can compete with the best. They have a strong defensive team and will rely on their inside scoring to win games. The Quakers are looking to make some noise in the tournament and are ready to face the challenge.

The Quakers face another obstacle in the form of the University of Pennsylvania. They are looking to keep their winning streak alive and are ready to face the challenge. With a strong home court advantage, the Quakers are looking to make a run in the tournament.
