Grenada to set up new government

After Grenada's General Fit-Paul, prime minister since the country's independence in 1974, died yesterday, the United Nations-controlled UNPAC (United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Grenada) today announced plans to set up a new government in Grenada.

The new government, which will be headed by General Paul's successor, will consist of members of the UNPAC and representatives from various political parties in Grenada.

The UNPAC said that the new government will be established in the next few days and that it will work towards stabilizing the country and ensuring peace and stability.

Study: rate of eating disorders high

A study conducted by the University of Pennsylvania found that the rate of eating disorders is high among college students, with more than 1 in 10 students affected.

The study, which surveyed 1,200 college students, found that 11% of the respondents had engaged in binge eating behavior in the past week, while 7% had engaged in purging behavior.

The researchers said that these rates are higher than previous studies, which had estimated the prevalence of eating disorders among college students at around 5% and 4%, respectively.

The study also found that women were more likely to report eating disorders than men, with 14% of women reporting binge eating and 9% reporting purging, compared to 7% and 4% of men, respectively.

The researchers said that these findings highlight the need for increased awareness and intervention to address eating disorders in college students.
Challenging the front-runner

Republican John Egan focuses on taxes and economic growth

THE DAILY PENNSYLVANIAN: The biggest issue on which all three candidates have focused is jobs. What are you going to do to create jobs in Philadelphia?

MAYORAL CANDIDATE JOHN EGAN: The first thing that we have to do is to get the economy up and running in Philadelphia. If we raise taxes, we have to stop at all of the losing jobs that we have, and therefore we don't have the numbers on creating any additional jobs. We have to start with that. We have to identify our market's, which we've never done before. We watch jobs' trends to the heads, and we've just kind of tossed and turned. That is something that we need to do. If we want to get those jobs to the heads, we face them because of better tax rates, it's a much simpler place to do business, better climate, and so on. It's not to do it if you look at New York, and you look at Philadelphia as a competitor of New York, our tax structure is as long as we want, our labor is cheaper than New York, and it's a lot cheaper to do business in the city of Philadelphia as it is in New York. So we need to do something about that kind of thing.

TP: I think we should do a thing on economic development that presently we are ignoring in Center City.

Egan: Internal. Prior to that I know Center City can stand as its own economic development. It's the neighborhood business districts again. I think we do all these things in the things that get done in this city.

DP: Why are you recoiling as a Republican?

Egan: My campaign is distinguished by what we plan on doing it the Democratic Party in the City of Philadelphia. They've never been much competent in terms of the needs of Philadelphia.

THOMAS LEONARD: I set out in this campaign to set in a long time, both Republican and independent - we intend to excuse companies from the lux period up the bureaucracy, and it's really not as onerous as you. Philadelphia is to remain vibrant or prosperous. I'm the next four years - indeed, over the next 20 years, if businesses. Very often we have small businesses that you don't like that they can compete or be legitimate here, and it's really not as onerous as you think. It's altogether be a small business. It think that's really the secret for it. We've gone to consider our state and tax the get out, get rid of the unnecessary restrictions. On the one hand, you could say there's no need to even go to ten businesses that you can just start and to the people that are there, the people of the city of Philadelphia are angry about anything they've always got over these rights, they're going to protest police protection, etc. So the people of Philadelphia want a change. I think that we need a mayor who will be able to bring that change to us.

DP: What are you going to do for change when you switch parties?

Egan: No. So, I think it's always been reported that I was a liberal Democrat. I believe they thought I was a liberal Democrat because the guys has the tendency to sort of personality, and because I think it's been a bonds to a person, so you change your philosophy when you change parties.

DP: You're running what is probably one of the best campaigns for mayor of any Republicans in the last 30 years, and you're expected to do better than party Republicans. Whether you win or lose, what have you accomplished for the city's eleven years just by running such a campaign?

Egan: It seems to me that what we're doing is benefiting Philadelphia. We believe we're going to win this election. We have won one, and we're going to do it. The only thing that the liberals are killing the city is a gross receipts tax imposed on businesses. The last wage tax was only on city residents, not's counter-

LEONARD: The major problem that confronts us in Philadelphia is the tax. Education is one, the type of scrutiny where you're spending the money in the institution, but you also have the very important one of our resources that exist there. And it seems as if the only school in the city that we've ever come close to realizing is the University of Pennsylvania - the Science Center and that type of thing.

DP: Did your philosophy change when you switched parties?

Egan: No, I think that it's always been reported that I was a liberal Democrat. I believe they thought I was a liberal Democrat because the guys has the tendency to sort of personality, and because I think it's been a bonds to a person, so you change your philosophy when you change parties.

DP: The single issue that all three candidates have is the need to do something to revitalization program or job creation program. We have a unique opportunity in another area of the country that has to be focused on. We have a unique opportunity in Philadelphia. We have an opportunity to do something that will be learned by the universities and research facilities here by any other place, but to do it on a national level. The entrepreneurial spirits in the drug and chemical industries, international businesses in those fields. We have the potential in Philadelphia to partici-nte in what futuristic says is going to be a dramatic growth sector of our national economy the biotechnological, biomedical areas. If we're going to do this, we need a mayor who first of all recognizes the potential of the area, but second, who has a very strong and aggressive posture on this. It seems to me that we have to do something about that.

LEONARD: The biggest issue that confronts us in Philadelphia is the tax. Education is one, the type of scrutiny where you're spending the money in the institution, but you also have the very important one of our resources that exist there. And it seems as if the only school in the city that we've ever come close to realizing is the University of Pennsylvania - the Science Center and that type of thing.

Alcohol Is a Privilege, Not a Sacred Right

By Ellen Fair

By David Goodfriend

You are a responsible adult.Therefore, you should be drinking beer or wine. Just don't drive drunk or start a fire with matches. That's the law.

All reasonable people should agree that alcohol is a privilege, not a right. But why is it that we are so reluctant to apply any form of social control to drinking behavior? Why is it that we refuse to consider our national interest when making decisions about alcohol policy?

First of all, there isn't a single position about alcohol policy which can be wafted about like a social fad...

Panel to discuss changes in conduct policy

By LAURA ORLOFSKY
A task force formed to examine questions of conduct policy today at the University for the first time.

The panel is the result of a faculty-staff forum last spring at the University's New Bolton Center last June. President Nicholas B. Samara and Vice President for University Life James Bishop, who chair the forum, said that their concern is "to examine the implications of a new generation of studies that have shown that the rate of sexual harassment has been increasing on all campuses and in all workplaces over the past decade."

"They came to a very different definition of what sexual harassment is and how sexual harassment took place on all campuses and in all workplaces over the past decade," said Rosemary Dell'Aringa, assistant vice president for student affairs. "The rate of sexual harassment has been increasing on all campuses and in all workplaces over the past decade."

"They also came to the conclusion that they couldn't handle this problem alone," Samara said. "This is the first time the University has brought together faculty and students to examine these issues."

The task force, which includes faculty members and students, will meet for the next two years to examine the problem of misconduct on campus. The group will examine questions of conduct policy that are part of the forum. It is expected that the group will make recommendations to the University on how to handle the problem.

"We're hoping to look at some of the things that have been raised at the University and what could be done to prevent them," Samara said. "We're hoping to do this in a way that's going to be helpful to the University and to the students."

The Mayor's Race

Mayor W. Wilson Goode,选拆 this year's Mayor's Race, announced that his campaign this year will be "a grass-roots, total community campaign." He said that "any service to the city is relevant and that every resident can work together to benefit our city." Mayor Goode has emphasized the importance of community involvement in the election process.

The Mayor's Committee for the Mayor's Race includes representatives from various community organizations and businesses. The committee is working to mobilize residents and urge them to vote.

Mayoral candidates trade tax proposals

Republican John Egan, Democrat Leonid Bernstein, and Independent John White have all proposed tax reform proposals. Egan has proposed a tax cut, Bernstein has proposed a tax increase, and White has proposed a flat tax.

Egan's plan calls for a 20% tax cut, while Bernstein's plan calls for a 10% tax increase. White's plan, however, is far more radical, calling for the abolition of all existing taxes.

Egan's promise to enact no tax cut is not realistic.

Egan has advertised and recited his promise extensively during the campaign. Egan has also said that tax cuts can be made possible by closing jobs and reducing the size of the government.

We can hold taxes down by increasing efficiency and reorganizing the city's government. Egan said during the debate that a mayor must take a firm and inflexible stance against tax increases.

Mayor's Office of Unemployment Services

The Mayor's Office of Unemployment Services has been most vocal and visible in its opposition to the tax cut. The office has been most active in its efforts to promote the city's economic development.

Fraternities to sponsor dance for Cerebral Palsy

Two fraternities will join forces to sponsor a dance for Cerebral Palsy. The dance is scheduled for Saturday night.

The dance will be sponsored jointly by a black fraternity and a white fraternity. The event is believed to be one of the first to bring blacks and whites together.

The two fraternities said the inter-racial joint effort would be sponsored under a joint effort we could make a positive statement about fraternities.

"Power 99 music appeals to both blacks and whites," the fraternity president said. "We believe that lower taxes can be achieved by increasing the size of the city's tax base.

Fraternity can work together and we can provide better services without tax hikes," he said. "During (his campaign, I've been most vocal and visible in its opposition to the tax cut. The office has been most active in its efforts to promote the city's economic development.

Burglaries hit two U. buildings

B. ARThUR RUBIN

University Police is investigating separate thefts from two campus buildings, the Graduate School of Education and Northwest Hall.

An employee was taken from her desk in the Graduate School of Education building at 1945 Chestnut St. on Wednesday night. Police said the thief entered through the entrance door and took a briefcase valued at $200.

Police said Northwest Hall, located at 37th and Spruce streets, was broken into between Wednesday night and Thursday morning.

"Nothing of value (was) taken," said University Police Lt. Peter Santos.

"Police can only urge that police are advising students to always lock their doors and windows when they leave the buildings." Police said the door locks had been broken.

"Burglaries are not uncommon," said University Police Lt. Robert Corrales.

"We've been seeing a lot of burglaries occur in the neighborhoods surrounding campus," said Wharton senior Steven M. Pollak, who lives in a University House Residence Advisory.

"We're taking a direct action," said Mawr College and Pierce Junior College student Alex Pidara, who lives in South House Residence Advisory.

"A lot of different groups are increasing their activities," said Deportes, who lives in University House.

"The students are working together to make sure the University House is a safer place to live." Police said.

"We're hoping to increase the level of security on campus," said University Police Lt. John DePortes.

Penn State and Brown are ready
Paterno prepares for his alma mater

Penn State football coach Joe Paterno had a field vacation this week, even though there were plenty of people who would have liked him to do just the opposite.

This week, Paterno could have been in the shade at Nationals Park, enjoying the sun and the action at the NCAA Division I-A National Championship.

Instead, Paterno spent the week preparing for a game against Brown, his alma mater.

"I'll be going to Brown like we play against any team," Paterno said. "We have to be ready for them, just like we would for any other team." Paterno, who is the winningest coach in NCAA history, has a record of 379-107-4 in 28 seasons at Penn State.

Brown, on the other hand, is 2-16-1 this season, but Paterno is not taking them lightly.

"Brown's a good team," Paterno said. "They have some talent, and they play hard." Paterno, who is in his 23rd season at Penn State, has a record of 376-109-4 in 22 seasons at Brown.

The game is set for Saturday night at 7:30 pm at Franklin Field.

Field Hockey upsets Maryland
Rubin's goal, assist key 2-1 victory

The Penn field hockey team didn't think they needed to win, but they did.

"It was another corner hit," Vivial said. "We had a lot of shots, but we just couldn't seem to find the back of the net." Paterno, who is in his 32nd season at Penn State, has a record of 376-109-4 in 31 seasons at Brown.
