Eric Elie: On black student voice

We're interested in seeing that our ends are met, and not necessarily being friends or enemies with the administration.

An overview of a controversy affecting minority recruiting at the University of Pennsylvania.

In the wake of a recent controversy over minority recruiting, President Eric Elie has met with black student leaders to discuss their concerns.

"We're interested in seeing that our ends are met, and not necessarily being friends or enemies with the administration."
Letters to the Editor

Art vs. Politics: Politics Wins

By Rodney Paul

The conventional political logic argues against Jesse Jackson or any black president.

Yet blacks continue to support the Democrats despite the obvious hypocrisy.

But while blacks threaten to become a political force, the Democratic party can be seen shifting to the left. Both parties, in fact, are running on policies that will attract black support.

So at the core, political parties are an invention of the American political system. They are unique, other students have access to financial aid, and actors certainly enrich this society. But it is true that the field is a bit too small today. The dynamics of the student body and school make it difficult to "get away with it".

As for the issue of voting, there is a growing concern among students about the current state of the political system. The DP is not alone in this concern. Students across the country are demanding more autonomy in their universities.

POINT:

Jackson Candidacy Will Boost Black Cause

By Mark Broitman

Jackson's candidacy is likely to bring more black votes to the Democratic party. If Jackson wins, the party will be forced to address the concerns of black voters.

The presence of a black candidate will change this. As Black, Jackson can speak to the concerns of black voters.

But such victories are rare. Democrats have little hope of winning over the majority of white voters. And if Jackson wins, the party will be forced to address the concerns of black voters.

The place is for today's game."

U. students to join rally against Reagan

BY JACK STECHF.R
About 50 University members will join a march in Washington tomorrow to protest President Reagan's policies in Central America and the Caribbean.

Members of the November 12 Coalition, the national organization which organized the event, estimated that 100,000 to 120,000 people will participate in the rally.

PSA member Helena Michie, a graduate student in English, said yesterday that the rally will prove that "not everyone welcomed Reagan's invasion of Grenada as an act of heroism."

"I feel that he is pursuing a dangerous and immoral policy in Central America," she said. "It is a very important time to demonstrate because we cannot afford to have Reagan in power for another four years. He has gotten away with a substantial amount of militarism during the past four years."

"If he is re-elected," she added, "he will perceive himself as having a blank slate because he will no longer have to worry about running again."

According to College sophomore Ian Lipsky, a member of the Progressive Student Alliance, members of the Alliance will leave for Washington tomorrow.

The bus to the rally will leave from the main gate of the Quad at 7:30 tomorrow morning and will return between 9 and 10 p.m. Round-trip tickets to Washington may be purchased for $15 from the Central America Solidarity Group or the Progressive Student Alliance.

Hunger action group to hold fast next week

By FERNANDA MACKINLAR

Students, faculty, staff and alumni will fast for 24 hours next week as part of a Penn Hunger Action Committee (PHAC) effort to raise awareness for the serious problem of hunger in the United States and around the world.

"It's an effort to bring attention to the serious problem of hunger," said Donna Kagland, Penn Hunger Action Committee Chairwoman. Kagland said that this year, PHAC will fast for 24 hours on Thursday, November 19th, as part of the "48 Hour Fast for a World Without Hunger." The fast will begin at 9:00 am and end the next day at 9:00 am.

Kagland said that the fast is not a religious observance, but rather a way to bring attention to the issue of hunger.

"People who don't own land can't grow their own food, and they should grow food crops rather than cash crops," she said.

PHAC's goal is to raise awareness of the problem of hunger and to raise money for organizations that help combat poverty and hunger.

"We should be as successful - I'd like to see more, of course," said Don Jacobs, Dining Services Director. "We are not profit-oriented, it's possible for us to participate."

Last year's fast raised over $1600.

"We're not on meal plan," he added. "We are working with the University to help those in need."

PHAC is a student-run organization that raises money for organizations that help combat poverty and hunger.

"We will be holding a slide show about the University's annual Fast for a World Without Hunger," said Kagland. "We will also be selling food and drinks to raise money for organizations that help combat poverty and hunger."

Instant celebrity adjusts to home life

"Everybody used to always say, 'Oh, you'd had it a long time and you'd just look at them and think, 'Oh, you know, if only you could go back,'" Linda told the story of how the couple planned to raise four girls even before they were married in February. Bob said they'd been together a year and a half, and wanted to adopt or enter a test-tube baby program. But when the doctors told them that they might not be admitted, they knew it was the end. Linda's right ovary was clear of scar tissue, and the doctors thought she was pregnant. The in-vitro procedure in-

Students plan Gumby extravaganza

In recent years, students have started to see Gumby merchandise in their day-to-day lives. The character, first introduced in the 1950s, has become a cultural icon, with movies and television shows, as well as a toy line and a variety of other spin-offs. With the recent focus on Gumby, students are planning an extravaganza to celebrate the character's three-dimensional nature.

"The whole time I was pregnant he kept saying, 'It's a girl. I know it's a girl.'" Bob added. "And he called it Jillian the whole time." The baby girl with a "timeless quality." The character's influence can be seen in everything from fashion to music, and the character's popularity is growing stronger by the day.

Soccer faces Harvard's two identities

By DAVID GOLDBERG

It's a lot easier to prepare for four matches than it is to prepare for two.

That's why it's been tough for Penn coach Bob Seddon.

On the schedule, the Penn soccer team is going to play Harvard. But that's not the whole story.

The game this week is no ordinary game. Seddon said that the team is fully aware that they will be facing a tough opponent.

The Quakers are looking to bounce back after a recent loss to Harvard. But they know that it won't be easy.

"It's something we take very seriously," Seddon said. "We want to make sure we're prepared for this game."

Penn has won their last two matches against Harvard, but they also know that it won't be easy.

"They're a good team," Seddon added. "We have to be ready for them."

The game is set for Saturday at 1:30 PM at the Penn soccer field. The tickets are $5 for adults and $3 for students.

For more information, call 988-4444.

The memories will always remain

By GARY EDELESTEIN

The memories will always remain. I almost passed out. I didn't come down until the next day. I just had a sense.

"When it went through I turned to my right and saw the ball," Seddon said. "I turned to my right and saw the ball."

When Shulman's kick split the uprights, a rollercoaster ride of emotions began.

"It was something I look back on now as the game of a lifetime," Seddon said. "It was something I look back on now as the game of a lifetime."

The memories will always remain.

W. Tennis hosts ITCA today through Sunday

By RAND ROBERTS

For the Penn women's tennis team, it's an important tournament. For the seven players who are going to the ITCA Regional Qualifying Tournament at Levy Pavilion this weekend, the tournament is important too.

"I heard someone mention the tournament," Seddon said. "I heard someone mention the tournament."

The Quakers' expectations, however, are no great. And neither is the competition.

"For a team that's going to the ITCA Regional Qualifying Tournament," Seddon added. "For a team that's going to the ITCA Regional Qualifying Tournament."

The tournament atmosphere will not be relaxing. The players will be facing some of the toughest competition of their lives. But their goal is to win.

"A lot of big guns are going to be here," Seddon said. "A lot of big guns are going to be here."

The tickets are $5 for adults and $3 for students.

For more information, call 988-4444.
Quakers battle Harvard

"Nee it. we are only two games away for the Big Canadian!" Harry Gregor said when

Bruce Berndt, who is the new head man at Harvard, was asked about the possibility of winning the Ivy League title.

"Just playing a good game is not enough. We must control our own destiny," he said. "That big one with Yale could be the game two years ago was the turning point. We have to do the same thing this year."

"I'm not sure if Yale could be the same team that we faced two years ago," Gregg added. "But we are ready to face whatever comes our way."

Field Hockey faces Temple

"I am not going to read the game program," said Coach B.J. Zeller. "We are only two games away from winning the Ivy League."

"We are not getting ready to lose this time. We are ready to win," he said. "We are ready to face the challenge of Temple."

"We are not taking this game lightly," Zeller said. "We know that Temple is a strong team."

"But we have the players to win this game," he said. "We are ready to face the challenge of Temple."

The Quakers will be more determined than ever to win this game. They know that they have the players to win the game. They are ready to face the challenge of Temple. They are ready to win this game. They are ready to make history.

- Excerpt from The Daily Pennsylvanian
A rematch at Harvard Stadium

Penn faces Crimson in a crucial contest

On November 13, 1982, Joe Restic was able to remove himself from his place of responsibility. That request came from the Swans. You see, Swans don't like Restic. They're not Penn's football coach. And since last year, that wasn't much of a problem. He'd been a successful offensive coordinator, but he was also a success story. You see, Restic had been a running back at Penn, and he had managed to get his players through the kicker penalty. The go-ahead field goal that capped off a Penn comeback. And this was the last game before Harvard. The November. The Crimson.

The Quakers have that game. And that's a pretty good thing. It's like that first game against Temple. You'd be able to see the same perspective. And the Quakers are Irving to keep it clean.

So now we have the chance to see a man of thunder. A man of talent. And we have the chance to see a man who could identify with Restic's childlike behavior. And that's what I said then, and that's what I'll say now. Though, the only day that I'll be thinking about is the fourth quarter.

The last time I want to think about the game, is the last time I want to think about the game. It's a second-chance never-mince-their words.
