"This wasn't a bad defeat," W. Cagers said. "And we won the most important game of the year for the season." And so Ohio's Coach Brown will be looking for a chance to win the next game.

The week after all, was the week that ended in the rain on Sunday. We had our last sunday at home for this year. We were sorry for the rain, but we were glad to have it.

Sports, meanwhile, was variously exciting and uninteresting. Monday morning meeting, but they didn't call it "morning." We had our last meeting on; we were glad to have it.

Experience was the difference

The Penn Quakers played almost exactly the way Coach Rick Resnek had envisioned when they went to Ohio University.

For a third straight year, the Quakers were defeated by the Bobcats in a non-conference game. The Quakers did not have the usual experience expected of them, and the Bobcats were able to take advantage of that.

But experience was not the only reason for the Quakers' loss. The team was also outplayed by the Bobcats in every aspect of the game.

The Quakers did not make the big plays. They missed several key shots, turnovers, and critical opportunities that could have changed the course of the game.

The Bobcats, on the other hand, made the most of their opportunities. They played a faster pace and capitalized on the Quakers' mistakes.

The Quakers, who started the season with high expectations, were simply outplayed by the Bobcats. The loss was a reminder that experience is not always enough to overcome talent. The Quakers will need to improve their execution and reduce their turnovers if they hope to compete with the Bobcats in the future.
