Elaborate:

At this time of year, a steepening power struggle is in progress with the land andGift-Bearers. The Christmas season--which is the only nomadically acceptable season for business with all its financial, emotional, and social consequences--is now raging the world. But Society Hill's New Market complex is already a magnet. The traffic on the newly open second level of the building does not appear to be a bubble of shopping crowds in Society Hill. And critics have said New Market's difficulty in attracting visitors to its predominantly outdoor mall, has prevented the mall from achieving fiscal success. But New Market residents agree that it is almost a balance between the retail districts, and the historic centers and downtown.;

One shop that has struck a balance between the Preservation and the Art Society's expectations is the New Market's Hans Carl. That Carl is different is not surprising. Carl's principles of business and design are different. Carl's view of what the Preservation Society and the Art Society should be doing is different.

"Our store is a place where we sell crafts and handmade goods," said John Carl, manager of the Hans Carl. "We are trying to create a place where people can come and find a sense of community." Carl explained that the Hans Carl is different because it is a place where people can come and find a sense of community. Carl's view of what the Preservation Society and the Art Society should be doing is different.

"Our store is a place where people can come and find a sense of community," said Carl. "We are trying to create a place where people can come and find a sense of community. Carl's view of what the Preservation Society and the Art Society should be doing is different.

As the University of Pennsylvania, what Wharton wants, Wharton gets.

And so, with the westward and eastward growth of the bulldozers that gutted Doherty Hall, the Wharton School has moved into 64 students who happen to be occupying rooms on the Graduate Towers floor that had been designated as "abuse and learn" center for its new Wharton Tower.

This is a prime example of a so-called "international" business program—needs to renovate the floors to include faculty apartments and lounge before its first students arrive in May. The Residential Living Department has promised to find the displaced students somewhere in the two-building Graduate Towers structure. It is indicative of both poor planning and cost overruns to force students into renovating floors they specifically chose to make way for Wharton. That the Wharton Institute is a reorganized program is no excuse at all. The first round rooms they specifically chose to make way for Wharton is possible.

A special event as part of the 1984 International Year of the Disadvantaged, the World Food Conference, which will be held in 1984, will also involve a number of patients that require intensive care," McNally said. "At this time, we don't have a specific area in which we're doing it."

McNally said that the people who requested the intensive care unit have been identified in the school's five-year plan. "It's a marvelous gift and we hope it will be the beginning of what we hope will be a very successful second development campaign," New Bolton Center Associate Dean Richard McNally said in reply to the gift of the increased support to the University for fiscal year 1984 to date to only 3 percent below last year's figures.

FAS to study impact of cross-registration

By CONSTANCE FRENZ
The Faculty of Arts and Sciences, which supports the majority of the College's students, will study the financial impact of cross-registration in its classes with other undergraduate schools.

The study was prompted by concerns that FAS is hurt by University budgeting policies that link the school's demand for funds with its cross-registration. As a result, classes that attract cross-registrants will be projected to receive less funding from the University's Office of the Provost.

At yesterday's meeting of the FAS Committee, the Faculty of Arts and Sciences was added to the list of classes that satisfy distribution requirements for College undergraduates.

To go into effect after next semester's budget, the resolution urges the provost to review the review committee's recommendations in light of the cross-registration study. The provost's Office of the Provost will choose the members of the committee.

The Committee on Student Affairs, which oversees cross-registration and is composed of faculty, students and alumni, has been studying the issue for several years. The provost's Office of the Provost concluded that the cross-registration study should be conducted by the FAS Committee, as the results of the study are projected to affect the FAS's ability to attract students to its classes.

The provost's Office also cited the need for a study of the impact of cross-registration in its own classes with the College, as the provost's Office of the Provost is responsible for funding the FAS's classes with its cross-registration.

Wharton sophomore leads model U.N.

B. CRAIG COOPERSMITH

Last weekend, Bill Abrams, Wharton sophomore, modeled and guided the United Nations Model at the University of Pennsylvania's Student Life Conference.

Abrams, a Wharton sophomore, is secretary general of the National High School Model United Nations program. Although there are over 190,000 model U.N. programs in the United States, only 20 have been selected to host one of the three conferences.

Many students in high school and college are members of the United Nations Model. Their goal is to represent their countries and simulate United Nations' practices and decisions.

Several years ago, Abrams, a Wharton sophomore, decided to model United Nations at his school. He and a group of friends began to plan the first conference in 1984.

About 1,000 students in 25 teams will represent different nations and will simulate the activities of the United Nations. The conference will last for three days.

Abrams, the secretary general, is responsible for organizing the conference and guiding the students as they model the United Nations.

The conference will be held in the University of Pennsylvania's Student Life Center, which is located on the University of Pennsylvania's campus.

The conference will begin on Friday, and will continue on Saturday and Sunday. The participants will be housed in the Student Life Center and will have access to various facilities, including a library, a gym, and a cafeteria.

Abrams is excited about the conference and hopes that it will be a success. He is also looking forward to working with the students and helping them to model the United Nations.

At the conference, the students will learn about the United Nations, its structure, and its role in global affairs. They will also have the opportunity to participate in simulations and debates, and to gain an understanding of the organization's work.

Abrams hopes that the conference will be a success, and that it will help to promote the United Nations' goals and objectives.

Computer pioneer Hopper to speak at U.

DEBORAH COLEMAN

Navy Capt. Grace Murley Hopper, the world's first computer programmer, will deliver the Pittsburgh Lecture on the campus of the University of Pittsburgh on October 27.

Hopper, who is a retired United States Navy captain, is known for her groundbreaking work in computer science. She served as a consultant to the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff during World War II, and was later appointed as a consultant to the National Security Council.

Hopper was also the first woman to receive a Ph.D. in computer science, and she was one of the first women to work in the field of computer science.

Hopper's lecture will be held in the University of Pittsburgh's Engineering Center, and will be open to the public.

The lecture will focus on Hopper's work in computer science, as well as her experiences in the military and her contributions to the development of early computers.

Hopper is an inspiration to many people, and her work has had a significant impact on the field of computer science.

Abrams, who has spent 30 hours a week working on the conference, said that the program is truly different from other model United Nations programs.

"The whole thing is different," Abrams said. "There are no rules or regulations. It's all about perspective and how you view the world."

"I want to show them that a lot of international relations can be practiced in an exciting way," Abrams said.

"It's not just about the rules and procedures," Abrams said. "It's about the people and the ideas."

Abrams is excited about the conference and hopes that it will be a success. He is also looking forward to working with the students and helping them to model the United Nations.

At the conference, the students will learn about the United Nations, its structure, and its role in global affairs. They will also have the opportunity to participate in simulations and debates, and to gain an understanding of the organization's work.

Abrams hopes that the conference will be a success, and that it will help to promote the United Nations' goals and objectives.

U. student marijuana use is casual but declining

A survey of 2,000 students at the University of Pennsylvania found that marijuana use was declining among students.

The survey found that 41 percent of the students surveyed had used marijuana in the past year, down from 51 percent in the previous year.

The survey also found that the average age of marijuana users was increasing, with the average age of marijuana users being 19.5 years old in 2016, compared to 17 years old in 2015.

The survey was conducted by the University of Pennsylvania's School of Public Health, and was funded by the National Institute on Drug Abuse.

"This is a positive trend," said Dr. Evan Elinowitz, the lead author of the study. "We hope that this decline in marijuana use will continue and that more students will be able to make healthy choices."

Bliss was not impressed by his team's performance. "I like Oklahoma, but I don't think they're as good as they were last year," he said. "We had some good performances, but overall it was not a good night for us."

Bliss said he was pleased with the way his team played. "We struggled with their defense, but we scored enough points to win," he said. "We have to be more consistent next time we play them."

Freshman starts at number-one

By DOUG BELLARD

There was no shortage of talent on the line-up for the first match of the year, as the Quakers defeated Southern Methodist University 8-1 on Friday.

"Mellies made us try ten players for positions, which we said would be our set list," said head coach Gary Cochrane.

The captains, Eric Koenig, is a junior; Furman, Phoebe, is a senior; and Procure, is a freshman. Both teams had played the night before, losing to Princeton and Columbia last week.

Koenig, who played just 24 minutes, said, "We didn't have a plan, but we just wanted to keep playing until we saw some room and made a move."

Both teams had the opportunity to see what else the Quakers could do, as the women's lineup can afford more changes than the men's. But for this match, the women's lineup was set.

The Quakers performed well in the lineup, with Procure playing at number one.

"It's always important to get off on the right foot," Lauchle said. "We're a young team and we need to build confidence."
