Grants are big business for campus researchers

By ELLEN FLAX
Big business is not an accidental of the University, as professors who once were seen in a bureaucratic sense, are now in a financial sense. Grants for campus researchers money to conduct their research, that they spend so much time generating.

According to a recent survey conducted by the American Association for the Advancement of Science, professors spend so much time coming up with research proposals than two or three months of lab time.

But others - especially professor's proposals are only a couple of months in length. The application process takes iwt) to 12 months to complete.

In fact, many professors feel that the University is receiving more than it needs to support research facilities.

"The investigator often figures that their efforts don't get back as much as they put into it," he said. "But the University can't possibly support the institution, it doesn't get back as much as the money is put into it."}

"The efficiency of our research has doubled because the average grant lasts less than two years. The funds are not made up," said Ehrlich last week. "Their real effort is to maintain the University to let the administration do its damndest to renew the funds based upon the researcher's results."}

"The funding gap is largely attributable to the different subject matter, and the University is receiving only 18 percent of the University's federal research support, it doesn't even begin to support the humanities," said Paul Zingg, associate professor of English.

"I think there is a perception that the humanities don't merit support," he said. "Since the National Institutes of Health, the largest source of federal government funding for research, is interested in the humanities, they're not going to support our work."}

"It's unfair to say who gets the money - the humanities or the arts. We should say where it's going that isn't good - like warheads, or hydrogen bombs."

"Meanwhile, many humanities projects may need the funding gap. The humanities have been treated science and engineering much better than two or three years ago.

"The Reagan Administration has changed the rules and we've been left behind," he said. "Now our efforts are being judged by our peers on the basis of the quality of our research."}

"The investigator often figures that his efforts don't get back as much as he puts into it," he said. "But the University can't possibly support the institution, it doesn't get back as much as the money is put into it."
A Frightening Process

The decision to expel Alpha Tau Omega fraternity until September is, surprisingly, as unmodified as the University's handling of the case.

Peter Long, a Penn senior who has been expelled and who has had "serious" social intercourse, or sex, in a fraternity, was expelled from an ATO party last year. "It was a practice of the University's, a pleasurable, no-excuse publicity," and over 16 months of legal turmoil surrounding the University's decision to throw the fraternity off campus for charges of using, possessing, and distributing a controlled substance.

It's all frightening for many reasons.

And except for some College Hall rhetoric, the University has taken in no ways to stop it. It's scary that an undergraduate student has been left to handle the situation alone.

The sanctions are absolutely levied. All the brother members are left to carry on from one case to another.

But the blame falls more on the administration than on Lew. The case presented to Lew went through as a judge, two University committees, formal hearings, and a handful of low-level administrators. If the University had handled this in a timely fashion, he would have had a chance to hear overwhelming evidence.

Certainly the outcome of the case and the University's handling of it have given permission for any student to consider changing his attitudes on sexual conduct.

Equally disturbing is that the case fails to guarantee that another fraternitywon't face unfair punishment. The University's sanctions are nothing more than a thin veneer over the issue of student conduct.

We must begin to correct and nip the illness in its bud by noticing the symptoms. The general lack of sensitivity for others today is hereditary. The University's socio-political egomaniacs, but some are.

A Frightening Process

The decision to appeal Alpha Tau Omega's fraternal suspension from the University on the grounds that a number of brothers had "shared" sexual intercourse, or sex, in a room of the fraternity house on the night of an ATO party last February, Levin's ruling follows a year of turmoil at the University, a plethora of negative publicity, and over 10 months of legal wrangling surrounding the University's administration of the fraternity off campus for charges of sexual misconduct.

It's all frightening for many reasons. The case might be unprecedented in its duration, and the issues surrounding it won't go away. And except for some College Hall rhetoric, the University has taken no serious steps to stop it, which is sad that an undergraduate student has been left to fight for what's right against the whole of the University. The sanctions are aberrantly lenient. All the brothers must do is move. Most of the actions taken may or may not be good for the fraternity, but it's still frightening that the fraternity is fighting to stay on campus. It's frightening to think that the ATO case may be the end of the line and that the University will not take serious action to prevent the fraternity from ever returning to campus. It's frightening that the University is fighting to keep the fraternity on campus, even though they have been accused of sexual misconduct.

Both the Penn fraternity case and the ATO case are frightening in their own ways. The Penn fraternity case is frightening because the fraternity was accused of sexual misconduct, but the University has not taken any serious steps to prevent the fraternity from returning to campus. The ATO case is frightening because the fraternity was suspended for the use of illegal drugs, but the University has not taken any serious steps to prevent the fraternity from returning to campus. Both cases highlight the University's inability to deal with the issues surrounding the conduct of its students, and they demonstrate the University's lack of commitment to the well-being of its students.

SAC may fund Falwell speech

Right-wing leader's visit scheduled for April

BY BEN MILLER

The Rev. Jerry Falwell, outspoken leader of the right-wing Moral Majority, will speak on campus April 2, according to the Penn Political Union. The Finance Committee will still need to approve the recommendation by the Finance Committee to fund the speech.

If the decision is given a recommendation by the Finance Committee, which is expected, the proposal will still need to be approved by the entire SAC. SAC's President Brooks Harris, a senior, said last night that if there is room on the campus for two organizations to sponsor speakers, and that the PPU is approved to bring a variety of speakers to the University, and the Finance Committee decides to bring political speakers to campus, then the College freshman adding that he wasn't apparent to him, but it was not important.

But former Korean Cultural Club President Sam Kim said if Falwell was forced to resign he will demand his term be handed over to the vice-president, Mark Rodriguez. Rodriguez, who served as UMC chairman for three terms, was named to the post by President Sam Kini last night. He said that during his term he would like the new UMC to be a fair and liberal organization.

"I would like the new UMC chair to be somebody a lot more representative of the student body," he said. "I feel it might pass but only because of the UMC and Finance Committee leadership has been much more consistent.

"This year there were too many people moving in different directions," he continued. "The UMC will not be successful if they don't come out as a solid force.

"Since the PPU is the first group presented with the opportunity to sponsor the speech, we would like the new UMC to be less conservative."

She added that Falwell's visit would increase the variety of political ideologies represented at the University.

"He has valid political viewpoints," Pulkki said. "Falwell hasn't been given a chance to be heard by the students. He's not permission to speak in any of the Falwell events.

Baring Falwell to the University was entirely opposed to Connaissance's decision by the conservative campus newspaper The Red and Blue, but the group was not interested.

"The Red and Blue called us on the phone and invited us to speak on campus, but the group was not interested." Harris, an Engineering School senior, added the Wharton and Red and Blue morning snack, once per week for four consecutive weeks.

Supporting Student Civil Rights

To the Editor:

The following is an excerpt from the University’s non-credit course, "The University of Pennsylvania: its history, its meaning, and its role in society." The course is designed for upperclassmen and graduate students and is taught by Prof. Joseph Levine, a former member of the English department.

"The Penn Syndrome" is a term that was coined by a group of students who are concerned about the perceived lack of attention paid to their needs. The students believe that the university is more interested in maintaining a certain image than in actually serving the needs of its students. They feel that the university is too focused on its own interests and that it is not doing enough to support its students.

Chairman of the Republican Assembly, Student Government Association, and former president of the Student Senate.

To the Editor,

I am a student at the University of Pennsylvania and I am writing to express my concern about the treatment of women in our community. I believe that women are not treated fairly by either the students or the administration.

I have been a member of the University Women’s Center for the past three years and I have seen firsthand how the university handles complaints of sexual harassment and assault. I have also seen how the administration chooses to ignore or downplay these issues.

I am writing to demand that the administration take action to address the issue of sexual harassment and assault on campus. I urge the administration to provide training for faculty and staff on how to respond appropriately to reports of sexual harassment and assault.

I also urge the administration to provide resources for students who are affected by sexual harassment and assault. This includes providing counseling services, legal assistance, and a support group for survivors.

I hope that the administration will take these issues seriously and work to create a safer and more inclusive campus for all students.

Sincerely,

[Student Name]

Right-wing leader’s visit scheduled for April

The Rev. Jerry Falwell, outspoken leader of the right-wing Moral Movement, will speak on campus April 2. A call to fund his speech was put forth by the Penn Political Union and the University’s Finance Committee, as was a call to deny him the opportunity to speak on campus.

She added that Falwell’s visit would increase the aura of political ideologies expressed at the University. "He has valid political views," said Penn and "Falwell has the right to speak," said Peter, Brown, and Conzelman.

New group petitions in support of LGAP

By JEFFREY GOLDBERG
A new student group is being established to challenge the University's ban on student organizations that discriminate.

A new student group, the Pennsylvania Students United Against Discrimination (PUSAD), has been formed to protest the university's ban on student organizations that discriminate.

The organization will not limit its efforts to the University of Pennsylvania, said Pedro Ramos, a College junior, at a press conference yesterday. "We, the members of the Pennsylvania Students United Against Discrimination, support student rights as outlined in the University's non-discrimination code. We also support student rights as outlined in the University's anti-discrimination code," said Ramos.

The new organization will seek to overturn the ban on student organizations that discriminate against gays, a College junior, said at the press conference last night. "We are a broad-based group that will challenge the University's ban on student organizations that discriminate," said Ramos.

Ramos said that the new organization will work to overturn the ban on student organizations that discriminate against gays.

"We are a broad-based group that will challenge the University's ban on student organizations that discriminate," said Ramos.

He said that the university's ban on student organizations that discriminate against gays is unconstitutional and that the new organization will work to overturn the ban.

Quakers defeat Cornell and Columbia

The Daily Pennsylvanian, Monday, February 13, 1984

By Michael Littlepage

A physical lesson in defense

The Quakers defeated Cornell and Columbia on Monday night to win their second consecutive Ivy League game. The Quakers beat Cornell, 72-65, and Columbia, 75-73, in the first two games of the league in an effort to bolster their season-long defense. Winning the Ivy title will not only help the Quakers in the NCAA tournament, but could also boost the morale of the team.

The Quakers will be facing a tough challenge in their next game against Harvard, as they are currently in 3rd place in the league. The Quakers will need to maintain their defense in order to win the game.

M. Fencers lose

The Quakers were defeated by the Harvard Crimson on Monday night in their first Ivy League match of the season. The match was held in the Cahn Auditorium and the Quakers lost 19-9. The Crimson has won the Ivy title for the past three years and is currently ranked 4th in the nation.

The Quakers are currently ranked 22nd in the nation and will have to work hard to improve their season-long defense in order to compete with the Crimson.

Men's Track Surprises Princeton, 69-67
Pharr's outstanding performance leads Quakers to upset victory

BY STEVEN WERTH

The situation was simple. While the rest of us were watching the mile relay finish, the Penn men's track and field team was struggling to hold on to a two-mile lead over Princeton. And thanks to the heroics of one man, the Quakers' Jeff Novack, they won their 31st meeting in a row.

The lead was slim, but it didn't look like a race to the finish. With 900 meters to go, the Quakers had a 52-second lead. But as the runners hit the homestretch, the lead was down to 20. And with 600 meters to go, it was down to 10.

Then the Quakers' Jeff Novack took over. He ran his last mile in 4:33, adding a little over 40 seconds to his personal record. And when he crossed the finish line, he had won the race.

Pharr sparked the Quakers to victory.

"That was the best I've ever seen him perform," said coach John Burke. "That was the best he could have been."

"I was just going to run the two-mile," said Novack. "I just decided at the last minute that I was going to go for it."

"I'm just glad I got to run the race," said Novack. "I've been close before, so I ran today. I didn't know if I was going to make it through the last lap."

WRESTLERS TAKE FOUR FOR PERFECT WEEKEND

The weekend was a success for the Penn wrestling team. The Quakers won all four of their matches, sweeping the annual invitational.

"We had a lot of good performances," said coach John Burke. "And we had some bad performances. But we had a lot of good performances."
Cagers snap month-long slide with wins over Big Red, Lions

By DAVID GOLDBERG

They came out playing hard and worked hard. They came out playing with a purpose. They came out knowing what they had to do.

They came out knowing that the Penn men's basketball team had lost its last six straight games. They were 5-11 overall, and in sixth place in the Ivy League with a 0-11 record in the league. They knew they had to win.

They were looking for the victory, but in the match they made the weekend truly theirs.

Looking around the Penn locker room after Saturday's overtime win over Columbia you could feel the collective buzz of elation that comes with a pair of must-have victories. You could sense the joy behind the victory.

"We are back in it," Carlin said. "We are back in the mix."

"We are in the mix for a reason," Carlin said. "We are in the mix because we have a shot."

"We are in the mix because we have a shot," Carlin said. "We are in the mix because we have a shot because we are good."
