Skating rink economizes to stay open

By CRAIG COMERISCH

The Philadelphia Daily News

The rink will remain open indefinitely because of the most recent public interest law impacting the city's finances.

The closure of the skating rink on October 29 until March 10, which was originally scheduled for the entire month of December, has been postponed due to a lack of winter weather.

The decision to keep the rink open was made with the understanding that the public interest law is the theme of a Law Day conference.

The conference is to be held on the University of Pennsylvania campus on December 12 and 13. It is expected to attract a large number of attendees.

The conference will feature a variety of speakers, including the University's president, who will discuss the impact of the public interest law on the university's budget.

Skiing rink manager Bob Spero said that he is pleased with the decision to keep the rink open, as it will allow the university to make additional revenue from the facility.

"We have always been able to operate the rink during the winter months," Spero said. "But this year, with the public interest law, we have been forced to make some changes in order to remain profitable."

"We have been able to keep the rink open by limiting the number of visitors and by charging a higher fee for admission," he added.

"We are grateful for the support of the public, as they have continued to use the rink despite the changes," Spero said. "We hope that we will be able to continue to operate the rink in the future, as it is an important part of the campus community."

"We are continuing to monitor the situation," he said. "We will make any necessary changes to ensure that we can continue to operate the rink in a financially sound manner."

Syracuse Upset in NCAA's Atlantic Regionals

Louisville senior forward Danny Simms scored 17 points and grabbed 13 rebounds as the Cardinals upended No. 14 Cincinnati 76-66 in the Atlantic Regional semifinals.

The victory avenged the Bearcats' 64-57 upset win over Louisville in the regular season. The Cardinals improved to 26-6 on the season and advanced to the regional finals against No. 2 seeded Kentucky.

The regional finals will be played on Saturday, March 24, at the United Center in Chicago. The winner will advance to the Final Four in San Antonio.

Mondale's Race Heats Up

WASHINGTON — Walter Mondale, $110,000 out of pocket for the day, rolled up his sleeves and worked hard on April 3 to improve his chances in the Democratic primary vote in New York City.

The former vice president is trying to win the support of Jewish voters in the Big Apple, where he is expected to face a strong challenge from New York City Comptroller David Dinkins, who has the backing of the city's powerful Democratic regulars.

Mondale, who is trailing in the polls, is counting on his experience and his ties to the city's Jewish community to help him win the primary.

"I'm getting ready," he said, "and I'm getting ready to work hard."

Ken Meyers, Bob Kramer: Seeking consultation

Earlier this week, Undergraduate Assembly Chairman Ken Meyers and Interfraternity Council President Bob Kramer sent a letter to President Sheldon Hackney and President Thomas P. DiLorenzo charging the university administration with being unresponsive to the needs of fraternities and students.

Specifically, we can look at examples of when graduate students were evacuated from Graduate Towers, when the Administration tried to underhandedly push a contract because that obviously doesn't mean anything.

What do you feel is the main reason for this lack of student input into the situation and we're getting no answers from the administration? It's been a continual process of the administration not listening to us or even speaking on our behalf.

MEYERS: Ideally, I'd like to see him or the administration in general to agree to our position in the way his role is. He has to become much more of a student advocate, and I think that's a standard that's important for the role that a so-called advocate is supposed to play. What do you tell people that's important for the role that a so-called advocate is supposed to play. What do you tell people that's important for the role that a so-called advocate is supposed to play.

But, he won't be able to do that unless he doesn't just understand student issues in the long term. I don't think he understands where we're coming from. He should be seeking us out, and student input should be part of the process. Students shouldn't have to grovel for that input.

MEYERS: Ken as our spokesperson, or at least someone who understands student needs and where we're coming from as students. This isn't clearly defined, and there's a difference of opinion between the fraternity and Jim Bishop as the administration in general.

MEYERS: I think the administration views us more as pawns, perhaps, since we're only in office for a year. There is a large segment of students who do not like the fraternity, but they have not in enough occasions told the administration that they're concerned with the Greek system and that the Greek system has a place on campus. Unfortunately, they don't tell us what the place is. I don't see the actions to back up any humanitarian sentiments, so I'm making me believe that they are anti-fraternity.

MEYERS: The University consumes a large percentage of our paying. There are a number of students who do not like the Greek system, especially minorities and women who feel alienated by the Greek system. There are problems in the Greek system. These problems should be addressed, however, not in a half-way way.

The teller also decried the lack of student input in the situation and we're getting no answers from the administration. It's been a continual process of the administration not listening to us or the students.

KRAMER: The problem needs to be examined and studied for longer perspectives, and that way when we look for a solution we will solve the problems... I don't think that sanctions are a positive way of affecting the change in the system, and limiting the role of the fraternity is not going to create a stronger Greek environment. If the administration is committed to a stronger Greek environment, it is necessary to make sure that the leadership is going to put up support in the system, putting tools into the system and putting a lot more time and energy into the system.

MEYERS: We would like to see the administration's view toward students?

KRAMER: I feel that a lot of times I've been told that I don't know what's good for us, and I don't think there's a correspondence in all of this.

MEYERS: One specific example that was quite obvious a meeting with Dr. Bishop this afternoon was that we have a different definition as to what his role is. He has to become much more of a student advocate, and he has to be seeking us out, and student input should be part of the process. Students shouldn't have to grovel for that input.

School prayer raises a host of delicate issues. Much of the debate has focused on the appropriateness of prayer in the schools; less attention has been paid to the manner in which prayer may be conducted. The issue of prayer in schools is complex and often involves ethical and theological considerations. The debate over school prayer is not just about the presence of prayer in schools, but also about the nature of prayer itself and its role in education.

While the debate over prayer in schools continues, it is important to consider the impact of prayer on students and society. Prayer can provide a sense of comfort and support, especially during challenging times. However, it is important that the manner in which prayer is conducted is respectful and inclusive, and that it does not impose religious views on those who do not share them.

It is also important to consider the potential for prayer to reinforce religious beliefs and values. While this may be a positive aspect for some, it can also be a source of conflict for others. It is important that the schools create an environment that is welcoming and inclusive for all students, regardless of their religious beliefs.

In conclusion, the debate over school prayer is complex and multifaceted. It requires careful consideration of the impact of prayer on students and society, as well as the role of prayer in education. The schools need to create an environment that is respectful and inclusive, and that allows students to explore their beliefs in a safe and supportive manner.

School Public Prayer

Vigilates System

School prayer policy, like any public policy, has both benefits and drawbacks. While it may be beneficial to some students, it can also be a source of conflict for others. It is important that the schools create an environment that is welcoming and inclusive for all students, regardless of their religious beliefs. The schools need to create a space where students can explore their beliefs in a safe and supportive manner, while also respecting the beliefs and values of others.

O'Bannon nominated to board of Planned Parenthood branch

By ELEN FLAX

On Monday, the University administration told the board of Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania that it has nominated Robert O'Bannon to its board of directors.

The nomination came after a year of negotiations between the University and Planned Parenthood, which is a controversial organization on campus. The University had been reluctant to join forces with Planned Parenthood, but it finally agreed to do so after several meetings with the organization.

O'Bannon, who is a University of Pennsylvania alumnus, is a well-known figure on campus. He is a member of the University's Board of Trustees and has been actively involved in the University community for many years.

The nomination is expected to be met with some resistance from other members of the University community. Some students have expressed concerns about the University's association with Planned Parenthood, which is a pro-choice organization.

However, O'Bannon is expected to receive strong support from the University administration. He is highly regarded by University officials, who see him as a strong leader and advocate for the University.

The nomination is expected to be discussed at a special meeting of the University Board of Trustees, which will take place later this month.

Forum probes plight of Navy's minorities

By JONATHAN MCCLELLAND
Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Navy Fred Davidson emphasized the dangers of treating minorities unequally in the military yesterday.

During the discussion on prejudice which naval and marine officers face in dealing with minorities, Davidson and a four-man panel of military personnel gave advice on race relations and took questions from an audience of NTC-TC cadets.

Davidson, who is black, and the other members of the group, all black, but one white, stressed the importance of being sensitive to the problems of recruits from all-black units.

"It's no big deal now, it's no longer an issue," he said. "Once people get used to it and don't think of the word opportunism, they forget that was kept things stirred up." He also compared the navy's "open house" policy, a program used to encourage officers to continue their educations and to get advanced degrees, with the "open house" policy, a program used to encourage officers to continue their educations and to get advanced degrees.

In 1886, following a shipwreck off the west coast of Africa, an infant child became part of a family of apes who raised and protected him. As he grew, he learned the laws of the jungle and eventually claimed the title, Lord of the Apes.

Yet, years later, when he was returned to civilization, he would remain uncertain as to which laws he should obey... those of man... or those of the jungle.

Now, the director of "Chariots of Fire" captures this epic adventure of a man caught between two different worlds.

Fraternity alumni board meets with Bishop on long-term plans

By DELLA MAKOWER

The Interfraternity Alumni Council discussed long-range plans for the Greek system in a closed four-hour meeting with administrators in the office of University Life last Wednesday night.

"We spoke about a mechanism for greater older adult involvement in the Greek system, as had been proposed by the President and Provost," Vice Provost for University Life James Bishop said yesterday. "We discussed which advisory group would be the best to carry that out."

Bishop added that he hoped the IFAC and the University administration would "work together on several Greek-related issues."

Panhellenic Council President Alice Dick said Tuesday that Bishop indicated his support of the Greek system at the meeting. But she added that he "tried to propose solutions before we had figured out the problems."

"Exactly what are we trying to correct?" she said. "Nobody has been able to pinpoint what the problems are."

Dick said that she believed Bishop did not show himself willing enough to heed the input of Greek organizations. "He isn't concentrating enough on existing institutions for advice, such as the Office of Fraternity and Sorority Affairs, the Fraternity/Sorority Advisory Board, and each chapter's national organizations," she said. "He has the makings of adequate help right now."

Dick added that although the IFAC has in the past offered suggestions to the University administration on Greek issues like the alleged gang rape incident at Alpha Tau Omega, they were largely ignored. "The IFAC is willing to help, but they don't want their help to be ignored," she said.

Bishop requested at the meeting that the Advisory Board offer input on the issue of adult supervision in Greek houses, Dick said. "The Advisory Board is collecting input, and will work with the administration towards the best and most realistic plan," she said.

IFC President Bob Kramer said yesterday that the alumni "considered issues such as administrative attitudes and long-range plans for the Greek system" at the meeting. "Dr. Bishop referred to the administrative commitment to the long-term and continuing strong role of the Greek system," he said. "The problem, I think, is that the administrative and alumni definitions are not the same."

Baseball facing weather report

Rutgers-Camden and Textile not Penn's only opposition

By STEPHANIE KRAMER

Saturday's weather forecast for the opening of the Ivy League season was not the best for the Quakers, who are scheduled to play today against the Harvard Crimson in Philadelphia.

With the weather forecast calling for rain and snow, the game will be played as make-up from Tuesday's postponed contest. The teams are scheduled to play another doubleheader.

The Harvard Crimson will face a tough challenge in the Quakers, who are expected to be the top team in the Ivy League this season.

The challenge involved in keeping track of the whereabouts of the players is one of the biggest challenges facing the Harvard Crimson.

According to Coach Anne Sage, every time there is an open practice, the players are expected to be on time and prepared to play.

The Crimson's schedule includes several key games against top teams, and the players are expected to be ready for each match.
