An anonymous note was distributed to Wharton students last week warning them not to register for the class taught by Assistant Professor Cheng. The note claimed that Cheng was a poor teacher and that his class was a "waste of time.

The note, which was posted on bulletin boards and email lists, warned students to avoid taking Cheng's class. The note also suggested that students skip the class and attend another class instead.

"Beware of Dr. Cheng," was the title of the note. The note's author was not identified, but it was believed to be written by a student who had taken Cheng's class.

The note's author claimed that Cheng was a poor teacher and that his class was a "waste of time." The note also warned that students who took Cheng's class would be worse off than if they had not taken the class at all.

"If you are concerned with good teaching and research, which is important for laypeople who want to serve on the National Board of Directors of Physicians for Social Responsibility was also involved in the PSR event. The student is a first year student at the University of Pennsylvania, and became involved with PSR as a first year student at the University.

According to Elizabeth Foley, the event was "the biggest event of the year for PSR." The event was attended by over 500 people, and included a panel discussion and a reception.

The panel discussion was moderated by Elizabeth Foley, and featured guests including Richard Steinman, who is a professor of medicine at the University of Pennsylvania.

The discussion centered on the role of health care in society, and the importance of research in improving health care.

The panel included Dr. Cheng, who is a professor of medicine at the University of Pennsylvania, and Richard Steinman, who is a professor of medicine at the University of Pennsylvania.

After the panel discussion, students were invited to participate in a reception, which included food and drinks.

"We're talking about results from basic to clinical research, and we want people to know that this is what we do," said Elizabeth Foley. "We want people to understand that health care is a team effort, and that everyone has a role to play in improving health care."

Hart whips Mondale in Connecticut

WASHINGTON - President Jimmy Carter easily won the Democratic presidential primary in Connecticut, where he campaigned on Thursday in a bid to recover from his recent loss in Indiana. Carter won the Connecticut primary by a wide margin over Senator Edward M. Kennedy, the front-runner in the race for the party's nomination, according to an initial tabulation of the vote. Carter captured 88 percent of the vote, far more than the 55 percent he needed to win the nomination. Kennedy received 12 percent. The results were announced by the Connecticut Democratic Party, which is running the primaries in both states. Carter, who is running for re-election, is seeking to become the first Democrat to win both states since John F. Kennedy in 1960. Kennedy, who is seeking a second term, is facing challenges from former Senator George McGovern of South Dakota and former Governor Jimmy Carter of Georgia.

Runoff likely in Salvador vote

SAN SALVADOR - Officials here ruled out a runoff election in Wednesday's presidential election, despite an initial count that showed no clear winner.

The Salvadoran military government speaks for all the candidates in a runoff vote, and has said it will hold the election on April 2.

It is not clear how many Salvadorans voted, but unofficial reports said about 80 percent of eligible voters cast ballots.

The top candidates are former general Jose Pablo Duarte, who won 40 percent of the vote, and former mayor of San Salvador, Antonio Obregon, who got 33 percent.

The other candidates are Lucia de la Cruz, with 10 percent, and Carlos Bleakley, with 9 percent.

Also involved are pitchers Rob Daber and John O'Sullivan.

The White Sox paid the Phillies $25,000 in cash for Coggins, who is on the disabled list.

White Sox manager Tony LaRussa said he hopes the deal will help his team get back into the pennant race.

Last area temple fights a battle for its survival

A fire grew in West Philadelphia. At one time, there were more than two dozen active synagogues in the heart of West Philadelphia. But by the 1960s, most had left the community or closed. Today, there are but two synagogues in the neighborhood. The Jewish community center in the area is not immune from the current economic downturn. The center is facing financial difficulties and the board is considering what to do. The center is a vital part of the community, providing a place for people to gather and socialize, and it is a place where people can get help with various issues. The center is currently facing a $100,000 deficit, and the board is considering various options for addressing the situation. One option being considered is to merge with another organization or to seek out a new location. The center is also looking into other revenue streams, such as renting out space for events or offering classes. The board is working hard to find a solution to the financial problem and to ensure the continued success of the center.
In my opinion, the University of Pennsylvania has a serious problem that seems to be getting worse. I feel this is something that the administration has not yet acknowledged. It is the kind of issue that requires immediate attention.

The problem is one of the most important issues facing the University today: the decline in student morale. The morale of students is declining to an alarming degree. The University has lost its ability to provide a sense of community and purpose for its students.

The decline in student morale is evident in the way students behave on campus. It is a problem that is becoming more prevalent and is now a pressing issue that requires immediate attention.

The vast majority of the student population feels disengaged from the campus community. The administration seems to have lost touch with its students and is no longer able to address their concerns.

The administration must take action to address this problem. The University cannot continue to ignore the needs of its students. The University must take action to improve student morale and create a sense of community for its students.
Task force to present forum on misconduct

The University's Task Force on Conduct and Misconduct will hold an open forum tomorrow to get input from groups on how to improve the climate of the University and to hear concerns, questions and suggestions.

"Nearly all of the meeting will consist of members of the task force hearing the views of the participants," Bishop said. "We hope to get a wider segment of views, and perhaps some creative idea."

The task force members said they hope to have ideas for improving one area and another. The forum will draw new input from various members of the University community, and in virtually all discussions. "We want to address why they happen and how Penn can prevent recurrences," he said.

A student leaders join annual AAUS national student forum

By ADRIAN GOLDSMIDT

The University delegation to the national conference of the American Association of University Students, AAUS, a national student organization with 63 member schools, was founded at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill to advocate for the student summers. The group's function is to present information about common problems and to share solutions among universities. The University delegation will present their research on residential life policies at the conference.

Luntz stressed the importance of panelists. "We're doing this so that we can share the same problems and hopefully, if we all put our minds together, we can solve some of those problems," he said.

"Meetings don't build a democracy," Education Council President Jill Weisenfeld said. "They're good for socializing and having fun, but that's not an excuse."

"We're doing this so that we can share the same problems and hopefully, if we all put our minds together, we can solve some of those problems," she said.

"And any additional source of input is important for career advancement," she said. "But that's not an excuse."

RABBIT to address U. on religious conflict

By EILEEN SULLIVAN

A professor of Jubile Negin will address the International Relations Undergraduate Program on Jewish and Christian viewpoints on the Arab-Israeli conflict.

The lectures by John Fischer, a visiting faculty member at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, will be held at 7:30 p.m. in Johnson Hall on April 12, 16, and 20.

Whether or not one is a Christian, a Jewish, or a non-believer, everyone should consider the lecture, according to Fischer.

"In order to get to know the Arab," he will argue, "you must first know the Christian, and vice versa."

It is not just a necessity but an obligation to know about things that are beyond our experience...things that are tangible..." he said.

The lecture is sponsored by the International Relations Program at Penn.

The full schedule:
April 12: Topic, "The Biblical Background of the Arab-
Christian Conflict.
April 16: Topic "Theological Dimensions of the Arab-
Christian Conflict.
April 20: Topic "Conclusion; The Arab and Christian Conflict..."

Sophomore pitcher, rekindles three hits

Yesterday's Penn women's softball game saw the Quakers roll to a 20-0 win over West Chester. It was a game the Penners had been waiting for. It also made history, as the game was the first in Penn's record books.

The game only run came in the second inning on a two-out, two-run single by Willa Littman. "She really came through." Nicholson said. "It was one of the ways she needed to see the ball."

"I was able to hit the ball out of the middle of the plate," Littman said. "I think I was able to hit it in the right area and it was a run that we needed."

The game was a complete victory for the Quakers, who remained undefeated at 5-0. The win was a welcome addition to the team's record.

Littman led the way, going 2-for-3 with a run scored.

"We are just a pitcher's nightmare. You know, it is the way you would want to pitch to a team," Nicholson said.

The game's only run came in a critical moment of the game. In the second inning, the Quakers scored two runs on a pair of singles, setting the stage for the second big inning.

"They were really good this past weekend," Nicholson said. "They were able to capitalize on our only scoring opportunities with West Chester." He added, "I think we needed to see them hit two outs and it was a good win for us."
