U.Va. plagued by suicide outbreak

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — The University of Virginia has been plagued by a sense of suicide and suicide attempts.

During the past month, three suicides at the university have occurred, and five others have been hospitalized after suicide attempts.

Two of the students who killed themselves were members of the McIntire School of Commerce, a business school with a reputation for high pressure. The third student, a senior in the University's Nursing School, was enrolled in the university's nursing courses.

The university has been responding to the outbreak of suicides by increasing its advertising for counseling and looking at ways to offer even better services.

"There has been a big push to stop the problem," he said, adding that the McIntire School administrators were meeting next week to discuss the problem and ways of helping students deal with problems.

Phony death fools Libyan assassins

CAIRO, Egypt — A former Libyan government official has been found dead in a Cairo hospital, but an official at the U.S. Embassy in Egypt said he did not know if the death was real or staged.

The official, who asked not to be identified, said he was in contact with Libyan officials to determine if the death was genuine.

"We don't know if this is real or if it's a fake death," he said.

The official said he was unable to comment on the cause of death or if there were any suspicious circumstances.

JANA and state-run Radio Libya reported Saturday that a Libyan official had been killed in a car crash.

The official, a well-known journalist, was killed when his car hit a tree near the presidential palace.

The official's death comes less than a week after a Libyan official was killed in a roadside bomb attack near Tripoli.

Last week, the Libyan government said it had arrested several people suspected of planning to attack Western embassies in Tripoli.

JANA, which is owned by the Libyan government, confirmed the official's death.

The official's death comes as tensions rise in Libya following the death of Col. Muammar Gaddafi on Friday.

The official was known for his work on democracy and human rights issues.

His death comes months after he was detained by security forces and his family was threatened.

False threats disrupt reunion

NEWTOWN SQUARE, Pa. — Delaware County police have received reports of a potential threat to the Newtown Square High School reunion, which is scheduled for May 17.

Police said they have received no information to suggest that there is a threat to the reunion.

The reunion is scheduled for 7 p.m. at the Newtown Square High School.

Police said they are following up on reports of a potential threat to the reunion, but have not received any information to suggest that there is a threat.

Police said they are continuing to investigate the reports and will provide updates as necessary.

General contacts through life

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. — Police are warning residents of Englewood to be on the lookout for suspicious activity.

Last week, police received reports of a person who was seen walking near a high school.

The person was described as a man, 5 feet 10 inches tall, wearing red pants and a red shirt.

The person was seen walking near a school, but police said they have not received any information to suggest that there is a threat.

Police said they are continuing to investigate the reports and will provide updates as necessary.
Study calls for reforms in U.S. medical schools

By ANITA RAVAGHAN

For some years, concern has been growing about the efficiency and effectiveness of medical schools in the United States. Medical education has been criticized for being too specialized and too focused on rote learning, with little emphasis on problem-solving and critical thinking.

In the 1980s, the Association of American Medical Colleges (AAMC) began a series of studies to assess the state of medical education and to recommend reforms. The AAMC's report, "A Time to Heal: Reforms in U.S. Medical Schools," called for changes in medical education to better prepare students for the challenges of modern medicine.

The report called for a shift away from the traditional model of medical education, which emphasizes lecture-based learning and rote memorization, to a more integrated approach that focuses on problem-based learning and interdisciplinary teamwork.

The AAMC report also recommended changes in the medical school admissions process, with a greater emphasis on evaluating students' personal qualities, such as their ability to work in teams and their dedication to patient care.

The report was well-received, and many medical schools began implementing recommendations to improve medical education. However, the changes were slow to come, and the concerns about the state of medical education continued to be raised.

In the 2000s, the Institute of Medicine (IOM) released a series of reports that further emphasized the need for changes in medical education. The IOM's "Learning to Rescue" report called for a paradigm shift in medical education, with a focus on patient-centered care and interdisciplinary teamwork.

The IOM's "Reducing Error and Achieving Zero Harm" report emphasized the need for changes in medical education to improve patient safety.

The IOM's "Revisiting the Core Curriculum" report recommended changes to the medical school curriculum to better prepare students for the challenges of modern medicine.

In recent years, the AAMC has continued to call for changes in medical education, including the need for better integration of research and clinical training, and the need for greater emphasis on patient-centered care.

The AAMC's "Towards a Common Agenda" report called for a paradigm shift in medical education, with a focus on student well-being and social responsibility.

Despite the ongoing calls for change, the improvements in medical education have been slow and often incremental. Many medical schools continue to struggle with the transition to a more integrated and patient-centered approach to medical education.

The challenges of medical education are complex, and the need for change is urgent. It will require a sustained effort by medical schools, educators, and policymakers to bring about the necessary reforms and to ensure that medical students are well-prepared to meet the challenges of modern medicine.

Four...four...four...

That's all. folks.

That's the end of a season full of good deeds, small victories and memories anyone can remember. Especially seniors, who can hardly believe that three years ago when football season's win were about as regular as a trapped cocker and its recollection resembled that of the Chicago Cubs.

Since then, neither the Quakers nor the Cats have had much to complain about. Especially the Quakers, whose name prefigures the start of their championship Saturday— for the first time since...

1959—and the 24-0 troup over Cornell that permits the Ivy trophy to run in Philadelphia for an entire year has further boosted Penn Pride and the spirit and excitement that helped create the Quakers to victory.

One can only thank the team and coach Jerry Berndt, once again, for all the good times they have contributed for the past season, for all the unity and enthusiasm they have generated in the past few months.

Let's do it again soon, OK, guys?

Sex expert Ruth Westheimer to give campus speech tonight

By BRYAN SPELMAN

Sex therapist Ruth Westheimer will speak tonight on the topic of human sexuality tonight in Irvine Auditorium.

Moments before a campus appearance was scheduled to begin at 7:30 p.m., peak interest was evident in the auditorium. The expected audience could not be determined, as wait lines stretched around the corner and several students were unable to gain entry.

Westheimer, known for her candid and often-explicit answers to sexual problems, will field questions from students in attendance. The audience is expected to be large, but the number of those who wish to hear her speak are even larger.

"I think people are more interested in this topic than they've shown," said Westheimer, a College senior. "It's a nice opportunity to listen to her appearance." said itwin over the weekend that he thought the appearance at the University expects Westheimer to have an enjoyable evening because they've been unexplored and often-explicit questions will be written on index cards and scheduled to begin at 10 p.m. tonight.

In addition to her radio show, Westheimer does a cable television show called "Good Sex." She has been nicknamed "Grandma Freud" by some of her listeners and described by Good Sex as "a voice of Sexual Connaissance." She is also the host of a radio program, "Sexually Speaking," which airs Sundays at 10 p.m. on radio station WNYF in New York.

"I hope that everyone comes down to attend," Westheimer said of tonight's lecture, "I think I can give people answers to their concerns and be an enjoyable evening."

"On David Letterman," Westheimer often speaks at colleges throughout the country and has received rave reviews. Recently, she spoke at Duke University and was praised enthusiastically.

"She has a way of saying things that make you think," Epstein said. "I don't think everyone ought to see her," Westheimer said of tonight's lecture. "I think it should be interesting for both women and men."

But others have called net a joke and that before these see her, people complain, how do we know they're giving it the attention they deserve," she said. "If ten

The forum, sponsored by Connaissance Chairman Frank Epstein, will be held at Irvine Auditorium and will consist of a brief speech, an audiovisual presentation and questions and answer session.

"We collected almost 900 signatures to show them that many people find the films offensive," Iitwin said. "I wonder how many of the 1,000 people who attended the senator's film would sign a petition asking him to remove it from college campuses." Iitwin said.

But Cyvah said Iitwin's protest is "so different than a pagan fertility rite." His answer to critics is, "No one can tell us what we should see and what we shouldn't see."

"I think people are looking for something along these lines," Iitwin said. "But I don't think we should be given the option of not going through one was asked to show them that many people find the films offensive."

Sci-Fi convention draws city's fanatics

By WILL MARTYN

A Center City hotel was taken over by horde of elders, magicians and drag queens over the weekend for the third annual Jumping to Twilight Zone — it was the 48th annual Philadelphia Science Fiction Convention — held Friday through Sunday at the Philadelphia Center Hilton. The show, magazines and seminars were held in different rooms as fans of their favorite characters from various sci-fi series and movies such as the X-Men, the X-Files, and Dragon and Dragons role-playing game.

Conventions in Philadelphia are one of the most important sources of revenue for the city. They are the one place in the world where people come together to enjoy their hobbies, share their experiences, and learn from others.

Many of the fans are looking for friends who share their interests. They are the ones who have lost those students forever. They are the ones who are still going. They are the ones who have been interested in the same things for years.

A science fiction convention-going in fantasy gear

The Rocky Horror Picture Show, the Harry Potter series, and the X-rated science fiction parody, The Rocky Horror Picture Show, were the main attractions of the convention. The fans of these shows were able to enjoy the atmosphere and feel part of the community.

Many of the fans were looking for friends who share their interests. They are the ones who have lost those students forever. They are the ones who are still going. They are the ones who have been interested in the same things for years.

Quakers blast Big Red

"At the beginning of the season, the defense and defense didn't do much," Berndt said. "The offense would have a good game and the defense wouldn't. The new game, the offense would know." "But after the Army game, the defense and defense started playing well together. You could see that something went wrong." "I think the team is in the top four or five in the Ivy League," Baughan said after the game. "The team in the Paris basement. They played like it all year and they deserve everything they're earning." "Murphy — what more could you ask of a team than what this new accomplishment? I think that the team has got to go down as one of the best ever in the Ivy League," O'Toole said. "And it held itself a while in deciding it. It came with experience." "Things you slow down with experience," McGehee said. "Twentieth year, everything happened so fast. The defense-backs can hang. Now I'm a lot cooler." "But not too much so when nice victories after playing the final game of his career. Berndt, the man who expends up to 10 hours a week exercising for the next year, was determined to hang on to his promise after the game, and he did. "You did a good job. We made the right calls." B. STEVE GOLDWYN

Ithaca, N.Y. — It might have been better called a Frisbee goal for Penn last Friday night at Schoellkopf Field, but the ball ended up in the net.

First, the Quakers thought they'd scored a late goal. The ball sailed through the goal but the flyby was disallowed.

Then there was a third attempt, and now we're all alone.

"Two was lie," and now we're all alone.

Three years with the varsity we've had it not on too soon.
