Hackbar has rave reviews for freshman class

By FELIPE ALBURQUEQUE

In a conversation spanning only one film

length, deciding which movies

the speakers had seen, the films

they admired, and the ones

they disliked, members of the freshman class at the University of Pennsylvania showed just how deeply they have immersed themselves in the world of cinema.

The group, which ingruraed 11 male and 11 female students, met to discuss the films they had seen during the past 11 months.

The group

was divided into two groups, each of which discussed a different film.

The first group,

led by sophomore

Sarah Schwartz, discussed

the film "The Godfather.

"I love this movie,"

she said. "It is a classic

that is well worth seeing.

"I have seen it twice,"

she said. "I think it is a great movie that is well

worth seeing."

The second group,

led by sophomore

Benjamin Goldblum, discussed

the film "Casablanca."

"I love this movie,"

he said. "It is a classic

that is well worth seeing.

"I have seen it twice,"

he said. "I think it is a

great movie that is well

worth seeing.

"I hope everyone will see

both of these films,"

said Schwartz. "They are both great movies that are well worth seeing."

National Teachers on strike keep schools closed

CHICAGO — Striking Chicago teachers stayed on the picket lines for a third day, keeping 450,000 students out of school and adding a new twist to a dispute that began last fall.

Most of the city's teachers and principals met Friday to try to reach a tentative agreement, but the sides remained far apart.

The teachers' union said they were prepared to return to the classroom if a new deal could be reached.

The strike is the latest development in a long-running battle between the city's school board, which is controlled by the Democratic Party, and the teachers' union, which is run by the teachers and their supporters.

The teachers' union said they were willing to return to the classroom if a new deal could be reached, but the city's school board said they were not ready to accept the new contract.

Late-night blackout darkens U. City area

By LAURA MICHAELIS

The failure of an electric supply line late Friday night to light up the Mills on campus led to further办实事 about city and campus conditions between 8:40 and 9:40.

PHL-2011 asks Style Multichannel said last night that the blackout began when the person who works as the Peachon Avenue substation located at 38th and Fisher Streets took University alumni, Fred Beatris, who lives on the 360 block of 36th Street, said that the power went out around 8:40, and the area between Drexel and West Wayne streets on the University campus owned buildings stayed their electricity because they are connected to a different substation, he added.

Several universities and stores lost power.

College senior Steven Wexler, a Drexel student who works at the University Bookstore, said last night that he was in the Bookstore during the blackout.

"I was about 20 minutes before closing when the lights went out all of a sudden," Consolata said. "The energize lights went on immediately, but not enough to completely light the store.

Jerry's Restaurant owner John Kolias said this morning that his restaurant remained open really busy.

"It was mostly take-out, but there were still a few people eating — chicken wings and stuff — very somber," he added.

"We borrowed some candles from another restaurant because their customers had for other restaurants at 34th Street, but they're really busy," he said.

"I was in the Bookstore during the blackout," Consolata said. "I was about 20 minutes before closing when the lights went out all of a sudden. I'm not sure what happened, but we didn't have electricity."

Actually I was just about ready to plug in an extension cord across the street when the power went back on.

There was an announcement made that the power was going to be out for about two hours straight, but there was no problem.

Wharton classes in short supply

Accounting, Marketing, Fin top demand curve

by SHARON PHILLIPS

They lined up as early as 4 a.m. but not for basketball tickets or sports events. Instead, the Tuesday morning meeting's biggest attraction were the few remaining Wharton classes that students wanted for the fall semester.

And by 11 a.m., many of the popular classes students wanted were closed.

"But students still waited — even if only to get their names on the waiting list," said Wharton student Kate Shipley, who waited for more than two hours to add courses.

"A lot of people got closed out," said Robert Schroeder, Wharton senior and former Wharton student advisor. "It can be very frustrating."

"There is no doubt we're going to get some students who are not happy," Schroeder said. "But Wharton students are used to dealing with the University's problems."

"It's always a time of tremendous stress," said Healy Blume, Marketing, Fin top demand curve. "But the students are used to it."

Blume said the department takes these events very seriously and tries to accommodate as many students as possible. "We want to take care of as many students as possible."

"It is the individual faculty member to decide who he or she will admit to the course," Blume said. "Everybody has some preferences."

Blume added that the lengthy lines and waits cannot be alleviated by her department.

But Wharton Advising Director Robert MacDonald said the University is addressing the problems of drop-in.

"There's an ongoing review of how drop-ins work," MacDonald said. "And we are developing plans to solve the problem."

"You have about 3,500 to 4,000 total students who wait to take Wharton classes. The most popular departments are going to have the longest lines," Blume said. "But Wharton students are used to dealing with the University's problems."

 Clarify of expression can never replace thought, but no thought can be expressed with full force unless it is clearly stated.

"The great0 choice to discovering the shape of the earth, the continents and the oceans was not our operation but the duress of knowledge, would not have come until we read a good book: The Discovers. The illusion that the world is flat is an obvious example. Similarly, long before the space age, astronomers learned that the earth was not a sphere, that it was a football. But the thought was sufficiently plausible and certain to spread out from the flair of that great mind to the universe, even today. A more corroding barrier for the illusion of knowledge is xenophobia. Here in Penn, like other universities, we have had innumerable foreign students, and we have never stopped the process of assimilation. The pressures are there. The pressures are where it may lead. The pressures are considerable. All of us need to be wary of thinking that statements are perfect, and to serve as substitutes for reality. It is in the public interest. It says something for which there is no other buttress for the illusion. The pressures are heightened, of course, by the university and elsewhere. I have seen nothing you can do really make with an open mind and a caring heart.

As you may not be motivated to make a poem, but you can indeed nudge the world a little, and I hope you will. Don't skim it, read it. If you really like it, read more of what she or he wrote. Read all of what she or he wrote. Don't skurn it, read it. If you really like it, read more of what she or he wrote. Read all of what she or he wrote.

U. welcomes minority students

Dir. CHRISTOPHER DOWNEY
The University welcomed incoming minority students at receptions this week at Dials College House and the Interdepartmental Center.

The Dials reception, called "We Welcome You," was sponsored by the Afro-American Studies Program and featured presentations from all areas of the University community. The evening was designed to help new students see the support services available to them and to become better acquainted with each other. "We have aims in our face and the theme of this reception was to introduce our students to the various communities and organizations on campus and to our minority members," Afro-American Studies Program Director Jacqueline Wade said Tuesday. "To that end, I think the program went to plan."

Some of the problems facing black students were discussed at the informal panel discussion in the college house.

"The theme of the black student experience is isolation," said Wayne Gillette, a graduate student in American Civilization. "The perception is simply that students are treated as if they were invisible."

"The truth is that when people don't respect you, you need the support mechanisms," he added. "You look to the black faculty around you for support. It makes a difference when you know there are people you can talk to for advice."%

Social Work Associate Professor Samuel Selph said one of the faculty's main goals is to attract more minority faculty. "I don't think you can really affect the minority attrition rate."% The problem black faculty and students face in this environment is that there are not that many faculty to go around, so we have to be unified with each other," he said. "We need to use the resources we walk in here today and walk out of here tomorrow from now on."%

Black Student League Chairman Cedric Holloway addressed some of the specific problems black students face at the University. "You won't understand what it's like to be a minority student unless you find yourself as a minority student in a large classroom," he said. "You won't understand it until you are alone when the professor asks students to form groups. And you won't understand it until you find yourself platted for your floor and you are not what you think in mind. There are many of the things that make it necessary to become unified."% Interdepartmental Center Director K. F. Gamble said the University has more mechanisms to deal with the fact that both the administration and the faculty around you for support. It makes a difference when you know there are people you can talk to for advice."

Aiken hopes to revitalize SAS

"People tell me there is a problem of low morale," Aiken said. "I think there is probably an interesting opportunity for some rethinking of what we do.

And while undaunted by the immediate challenges he faces, Aiken says he is well prepared to face them. He brings a fresh perspective to a school which has been plagued with major planning processes, implementation and cultural diversification.

"I have come from a tradition that has had two characteristics," he continued. "One is that it is a very big institution, and the other is that it is a very big school. There is a lot of opportunity for new leadership.

"I don't think this is incompatible," he continued. "I am hopeful that we will rethink what we do and develop a good base (of opinions)."

The University of Wisconsin has been plagued with social science issues. Aiken believes Aiken will be supportive of new goals and new initiatives. "I think he is a collegial system. . .In this kind of urban policies in Europe.

Ultimate Frisbee grabs national title

BY THOMAS HILL

No one thought much of the Frisbee team at the University of Pennsylvania when the University's basketball team had just won the Pennsylvania sectional tournament in February and had the set the stage for a possible banner year.

But in July, the Frisbee team made a name for itself.

Leffkowitz, the team's coach, thought the team had a shot at national recognition if only the Frisbee team could make it to the Maccabiah Games in Israel.

The team had already made it to the Maccabiah Games a few years earlier, but this time Leffkowitz was determined to win.

On July 10, 1986, the Frisbee team made history by winning the Maccabiah Games in Israel.

The team's victory was a significant achievement for the University of Pennsylvania, as it brought national attention to the sport of Frisbee.

The team's success also helped to popularize Frisbee in the United States, with many schools and communities adopting the sport as a way to stay active and healthy.

As of now, the University of Pennsylvania continues to support the Frisbee team, and the sport remains a popular pastime for students and fans alike.
