Stalemate continues in newspaper strike

By ROBERT PAINAL

The Philadelphia Daily News remains at a full stop with no new talks scheduled, while mediator Robert Kyler said yesterday that the strike has been ongoing for 27 days over their demands for wage and benefit increases. The strike is non-economic in nature. Philadelphia NewsGuild Local 3, which represents about 500 employees, has been on strike since May 15. The NewsGuild said they will hold a meeting jointly with the Philadelphia Daily News to discuss the strike. The mediator Kyler said.

"If they were wise, they'd have talked to us a long time ago," said the mediator. "They're not talking to us."

But, amid a debate over the strike's impact, the mediator has already consulted with those of those involved in the strike. Kyler said.

"They are holding talks going on the 55th and management," he said. "Informal talks are better in a town hall." The mediator said a rally held a Tuesday a few days before the strike began to calm the workers.

"We've held 10 union meetings," he said. "Most of the time the unions have not been that serious.

"Of course, there are moments when the media is the news," he added. "But the strike is definitely not a part of the strike.

U. plans seminars on crime prevention

By CHRISTINA BAUER

The University of Pennsylvania, a public institution, will offer programs to alert students to the importance of personal safety as part of national crime prevention month, which began today. Victim Support and Security (VSS) Director Ruth Zinck said that the main goal of the month is to explain the importance of personal safety to everyone's right and everyone's responsibility.

"We want people to realize that any damage to their personal safety is a serious matter. We all know that," Zinck said. "But there's a need to bring the issue to the forefront in a meaningful way." The goal is for the public to have a better understanding of the issue of personal safety, Zinck said.

"We want people to understand that personal safety is not just about protecting yourself," she continued. "It's about protecting everyone around us."

"We want people to realize that no one is safe in this world," Zinck said. "We need to be aware of our surroundings and take care of ourselves."

A nationwide search for a new Residential Living Assistant Director has been under way for about two months. The group's letter states that "A full week has passed and not even one applicant has been received." The group feels that "If we could find someone who is interested in our cause, we would feel better." The letter continues, "We need to find someone to help us in this important cause."

Search for Quad head nears end

By SUE JUNG

A search for a new Quad head is underway at the University of Pennsylvania. The search, according to a campus official, is "not a light one, but we're determined to get it done." The Quad is a public space located in the heart of campus and is a popular gathering place for students.

"We're committed to finding someone who can be a leader for the Quad," said the official. "We want someone who can make the Quad a safer and more welcoming place for everyone." The official added that the search is "not a small one, and we're taking it seriously." The search is expected to continue for several more weeks. Terrorist group: American hostage to be killed today

BEIRUT, Lebanon — A terrorist group said today it was preparing to kill an American hostage who has been held by the group in this city for nearly three months.

The group, which identified itself as the Islamic Jihad, said it would kill the hostage, identified as David R. Breeden, a 37-year-old American teacher, at 4 a.m. tomorrow morning.

The group said it had decided to kill Breeden because he had been refused entry to Syria, a country where he had been seeking refuge.

I think in [President Lyndon Johnson's] administration there was a certain wishful thinking. He had objectives that he wanted to carry out and suddenly this big obstacle confronts him. There was a certain emotional thinking that the problem might go away. ‘We as a nation mitigated the toughness of the North Vietnamese—they were a tough lot and were willing to sacrifice more than our policymakers ever believed they would.’

Instead of the North Vietnamese thinking that the American people were going to be patient that the thought would be required, that they should get emotion-

At the end of the day, the North Vietnamese had to come to the conclusion that the American people would not be patient. President Johnson was very straightforward about it. He told me, ‘We can't go on this any longer.’ He was very straight and let everyone know what it had really been. It was a real problem from the very beginning. It was a very frustrating situation. It was a lot of our time and energy that was spent in trying to build morale in the troops overseas, in the back home, in the country. The troops overseas and the people overseas were not under the circumstances that they did a pretty good job. President Johnson invited people over there to observe the volunteers—reporters and people of that sort. The reports that they brought back home were that it was a hard situation. It was a tough situation. It was a lot of guilt. So they've got you coming and going. It was very hard. And on THURSDAY, OCTOBER 3 at 1 PM and 8 PM.

A version of Shakespeare's timeless text

For U.S. defense today in the world?

The military is an instrument designed to carry our national policy and basically associated with strategy, and it accomplished something that our policymakers did not accomplish, which was to make the Chinese realize that they would not do the job. They would not go in. And on FRIDAY, OCTOBER 4 at 8 PM.

DP: So the administration was trying to minimize the entire conflict.

WESTMORELAND: Mr. Johnson was very much concerned with our policy, which was to place tremendous obstacles in carrying out the Vietnam program. I think in this administration there was a tremendous amount of wishful thinking. He had objectives that he wanted to carry out and suddenly this big obstacle confronts him. There was a certain emotional thinking that the problem might go away. ‘We as a nation mitigated the toughness of the North Vietnamese—they were a tough lot and were willing to sacrifice more than our policymakers ever believed they would.’

What was going to be an educational documentary, ‘War in Vietnam’—did they tell you before-hand they had anything new? I think you're referring to a television program to do a documentary, as I recall discussing it—an educational venture. Again, I think the thrust of it was to try to get the American people to have anything else, I didn't have anything I didn't want to talk about. It was an ambitious venture and I consistently cooperated.

DP: Did you have any sense that there'd be trouble from the government?

WESTMORELAND: When Mike Wallace started hiring me about my thoughts and questions and I was not going to talk about them. ‘Lear’ is a social conversation with people of the ASEAN countries, the Association of Southeast Asian Nations. They said, ‘As far as we're concerned you were at war.’ And I said, ‘Tell me more.’ They said, ‘You lost the battle for six years at a time when the dynamics of Communism were changing drastically the perception...’ And to that point I've been consistently cooperative. I was very straightforward about it. The North Vietnamese were throwing down the gauntlet. Some of them would crystallize into a recounting of Vietnam for the American people. It would go on for 10 years, 1965 Omni Research Market Study

U.S. Army General William Westmoreland, Chief of Staff under the Johnson Administration, made national news when he was asked if he had ever heard CBS express an opinion on the Vietnam War. Westmoreland's response was, "I don't know. I think some of our people did and others didn't." This was a very frustrating situation. We think his articles in the New York Times were not in Vietnam when I arrived. Did you think at the time that there was going to be a draw-out affair—we had a Herculean challenge up there? We had a tremendous amount of wishful thinking. He had objectives that he was going to carry out and suddenly this big obstacle confronts him. CHOP will teach kids first aid

By Lisa S. Smith

By this time next week, a group of kids will be practicing CPR on a manikin. The children will have had a first aid class at the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia. They will be learning to save someone's life. And by next month, some of these kids may be saving their family members.

The course, which is being sponsored by the Emergency Department of the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia, will be held over a period of two hours. The course is designed for children who are at least 8 years old. The course will cover basic first aid skills, such as applying pressure to a bleeding wound, giving mouth-to-mouth resuscitation, and using an automated external defibrillator (AED) to treat a heart attack.

The course will be taught by a registered nurse, who will demonstrate how to perform each of the procedures. The children will then have the opportunity to practice each skill under the guidance of the instructor. The course will be offered at various locations throughout the city, including the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia and the Children's Hospital of Oakland.

The course is designed to be fun and engaging for children. The instructor will use games and activities to teach the children about first aid. The course will also include information about the importance of first aid and the role of nurses in providing care.

The course will be held on October 4th at 2:00 PM at the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia. The cost of the course is $20 per child. The course is limited to 20 participants, and pre-registration is required. For more information, please call 215-681-4300.

Up in Smoke

By David Smith

If you smoke, why should you stop? Besides the fact that a heavy smoking habit is bad for your health, there are economic reasons that make it cost money that could be better spent on a Ferrari, smoking is the single most important preventable cause of illness and death existing today. In the wake of the 1964 Surgeon General's report, the magnitude of this effect has become increasingly clear. It has been estimated that the average smoker, compared to a nonsmoker, spends 1.5 to 3 times more on health care costs, as well as an increased risk of lung cancer in a smoker (about the time it takes to smoke it). Group to open home for handicapped

By LAURIE MICHAELS

Leaving the hospital is a happy experience for most people — but for the severely handicapped, it can be terrifying.

They often find the change from a hospital or institution to life in a West Philadelphia home difficult.

Resources for Living Independent, an advocacy group for handicapped persons, is organizing an open house for the facility.

The center, located at 40th and Spruce Streets, is scheduled to open to the public on October 13.

Housed in a two-story building, the center will provide care for up to 12 residents.

The center will offer a variety of services, including medical care, social services, and educational programs.

The center will also provide a supportive environment for residents to develop their skills and gain independence.

"I think every student would be interested in this because eventually everyone has to know who they are if they are ever to make a decision," he said. "I think people just have to be open and understand more about each other." Zia said.

There are certain people who I'd really like to attend," he added. "I would like to see as many people as possible attend and to create a discussion between Asian and non-Asian students."

The Strategies for Survival workshops, in particular, will address some of the cultural tensions which exist among many immigrant-generation Asian students, according to students and faculty members. The workshops will provide a great service for the community.

A clinical study program is being conducted to evaluate an investigational chickenpox vaccine for the prevention of shingles. Shingles is a disease that usually affects people over 40. This disease may cause a severe rash, pain for months, and rarely, encephalitis.

If you are a CHOP, HUP, U. of Pa. or Wistar employee over 50 years old who has had chickenpox, you are eligible to be screened for this study.

Participants will be paid.

Legislator to fight for increased heat aid for the poor

By PAMELA SCHULMAN

More than 7,000 households in the state of Pennsylvania may freeze this winter — but not if State Senator Roxanne Jones has her way.

The Democratic state senator from Philadelphia plans to introduce legislation to provide state funding for low-income families who cannot pay their fuel bills.

Jones formed a coalition to help draft a formal bill and to refine the public and other sections about the needs of poor consumers.

"We are going to try to work jointly to lobby and educate people about the need for low-income energy assistance," she said last week.

Jones explained that the funding would be used to provide low-income families with assistance for the winter — but not for any other season.

The bill would also help with applications for the program.

"I don't see a problem," Jones introduced a bill this spring or any other legislation at present for the state in federal funds. The bill passed the General Assembly, but was vetoed by Gov. Dick Thornburgh.

Jones said that although she realizes that she will still face objections from the governor, she is determined to get further than last year.

"It will be a big fight," she said.

"The Senate is controlled by Republicans, so the bill will have to come from the House."

"But we are committed to getting more money for energy," she added.

Urban Studies Professor Theodore Hershberg said that he agrees with Jones in that the issue is "an efficient and equitable program that will provide for increased heat assistance." He added that he finds the money for this program "efficient and equitable," that it is based on "the concept of providing heat assistance to families in the state government rather than local area.

"There is a big problem in that the homes of the poor are not used efficiently and that they are lacking in good conservation techniques," he said.

To help alleviate this problem, LEGISLATOR has introduced a low-income program that will provide services such as insulation, making stopping, weatherizing, storm windows and, when needed, furnace repair.

Hershberg said that he believes that combining funding with services will result in the greatest number of people being helped most effectively.

Kansas City down California, 4-1

KANSAS CITY (AP) - Frank White, George Brett and Dale Balfour led the Royals home runs late in support of Dan Quisenberry, who pitched 1-2-3 in the ninth, to give the Royals their first lead over California in American League West.

Los Angeles' week-long winning streak ended with a 4-1 loss.

Graduating classes from both pages play like the big game of my life. I'm playing Columbia.

But the Quakers aren't going to be satisfied tonight with their three runs. They have had three chances to score and came away with less than half a chance. The offense has been hot in recent years, Columbia has relied on a solid defense and shooting. The Quakers are not yet ready to take the final step to the championship."

The Lions' defense has been a problem for them, allowing 69 points in two games, and two of their three losses have been against the Orange. But the Quakers are not ready to take the final step to the championship."

The Phillies sent 12 runs to the plate in the ninth inning, scoring eight runs in the third inning to highlight an eight-run third inning after Schmidt hit his 33rd home run.

Ryne Sandberg walked to force in the tying run, then Jim Eisenreich followed with an eighth-inning double to set up the go-ahead hit.

Three singles by Bob Boone, manager Larry Bowa and pitcher Danny Cox hit in his previous 20 at-bats.

Coleman went into the game with one victory or Mets losses would clinch the division.

Any combination of two Cardinals victories or Mets losses would clinch the division.

Monday will decide the division.

The two teams were tied 1-1 in the sixth inning yesterday as the Chicago Cubs closed their home season with a 5-4 win at Philadelphia.

Swept by New York with a 4-3 victory last night that reduced them back to the division lead, the Cubs lost their last two, including a 4-0 loss to Los Angeles.

With the victory, the Cardinals end-}

McFadden said. "It's true we have the talent, and we've had a better team than them in the past. It's just a matter of making the transition from a 9-1 team to a 9-2 team."

"We usually like to be a bit of a control and play a precise passing game, utilizing our quickness," Penn bad Margaret Scharf said. "On the grass though, it's tough to do that. It's more a matter of laying the ball on the open field and letting the backs run with it."

For the Quakers, "going after it" is a phrase that applies to almost every aspect of the game. "We're expected to beat Yale, but haven't been able to do it. This week will be a good test for our defense," Schnell said. "This has all the makings of a battle." "We need to play like a team that is capable of doing it," he said. "We're going to be physically and mentally prepared for this game," assistant coach Val Chad said. "We've made definite improvements in the consistency of our effort through the first four games. We've practiced on the grass all week and will make a five positional adjustments in place for Yale." "We need to have good intensity," head coach Ann Sage said. "We've got to get through the turf into the bowl. You have to work twice as hard on the road, especially at Harvard, but the team is pulling in a lot of preparation for this game."

"It's really a question of carrying a common goal onto the field. We don't want to go up there 'to see how we can do' on the grass. We have to get up thinking only of beating Harvard." "We are going to win," McFadden said.

Penn Weekend

"All the players get excited when Princeton's involved," Penn coach for Steve Wagon said. "They're a big rival for us."

The only catch is that the Quakers might not play Princeton this weekend, due to the format of the conference.

The schedule consists of two brackets of five team each. Each team has four matches, one against each of the four teams in its bracket, with the top two teams in each division continuing into the semi-finals and finals. Since Penn and Princeton are in separate brackets, the two can only meet in the finals.

"If we get to play them it will be very exciting," Sage said. "We're not sure what will happen, but we'll keep up after a few matches."

The Quakers face Delaware and Brown on Friday to open the tournament. They continue play on Saturday against Providence and New York Tech. "The top teams in our bracket are us and Providence," Sage explained. "In the other brackets, Princeton and George Mason should be very strong."

The schedule is set up on the strong performance of the past few weeks, Sage said. "We're ready to put ourselves in the position to win," she said. "Hopefully, we can project some of our mistakes from the past and try to play some good golf this week in back-to-back matches."

"We play with intensity," Sage added. "We'll do our best and if we can play solid, high-level golf all weekend, we'll be happy."

PENN HOPES TO KNOCK CORK AT Harvard

It's been a pressure of upheavals for the Penn men's basketball team. With six departures of former coach Craig Littlepage two days since the new season and the subsequent hiring of Lelch coach - and former Penn assistant coach - Tom Schaner is full this void, the Quakers are in an ongoing state of transition. Hoping to ease into the season — with the official press release just three weeks away — with a little adjustment, in order to avoid any unnecessary mistakes, Rozell said the Quakers are in an ongoing state of transition. Earlier this week, senior Chris Borrillo and junior Chris Elroy were elected co-captains of the 1985-86 Penn men's basketball team. Both Borrillo and Elroy will contribute veteran experience to the Quakers, who will hope for their seasons on November 26, when they lose the Colgate pick, 81-71. Six of them were all over the court and floor, in full scale, for good. "But we're all very tired up for this game," Quaker sophomore Karen (Continued on page 16)

With new offensive game plan, Penn hopes to knock Crimson

The Penn field hockey team has played four games thus far this season and is currently 2-1-2, 0-1-1 Ivy. Needless to say, Penn isn't planning on maintaining this particular variety of constancy much longer. With a showdown against Harvard scheduled before the Quakers' November 26, when they host the Big Red, the Quakers have come up with a new offensive game plan, for the Quakers. But grass alone has never been known to score goals or do anything with Penn knows that. "We're all very tired up for this game," Quaker sophomore Karen (Continued on page 16)
