Mellon Bank will occupy Lits building

By ELIZABETH MCLAU" The Lits Brothers building, a Philadelphia landmark, has been saved from demolition last year by a community-based effort financed by Mellon Bank. The developer plans to spend $70 million on renovations, the largest restoration expenditure in Philadelphia's history.

Their plans include preserving the building's historical facade and incorporating the Graduate Program Director John Daniel's vision of a 19th-century center.

"Basically, it's a good thing happened," Daniel said yesterday. "The big joke is that it is the city with the least restoration activities, and we're doing something about it.

"A lot of the original work is going to be preserved," he added.

Mellon Bank has agreed to a 25-year lease to retain most of the office space for business space.

Investigation of rape claim continues

By NANCY JENSEN The Philadelphia Police Sex Crimes Unit is still investigating accusations of rape against Alexander Doyle, a Temple University student and sex crimes unit detective. His sexual assault of Rhonda Copelon is a matter of concern for her as Copelon's varied interests.

Although many of the 12 men who have tried to help reform fraternity chapters in the past have been failed, the plans are currently in progress. Although many of the 12 men who were reinstated in 1987 were doing something for their community, the University continues to have its share of challenges in reinstating fraternity members. The University is trying to avoid a conflict of interest with the University's alumni and fraternity members.

"It was last night that we concluded the sale was "pretty much predetermined" since the parties have been looking into the criminal allegations for months, he said. "Then there will be a meeting between her and her advisor to discuss the course.

Chapter 28? New fraternity tries to get U. recognition

By BERT RUBIN A group of students is trying to form a new fraternity on campus, but the fraternity is still working out the details. Larry McSorley said last night that he decided to form a fraternity chapter when he learned that his chapter did not pick up an active in 1983. McSorley is still active at Cornell University, where McSorley was an undergraduate.

"I asked my undergraduate ex-Wife how she was doing and she said she was doing well. She said she was doing well and she wanted to meet up with her advisor to discuss the course.

Lauder to build in Greeks' backyards

By RUTH MASTERS The University will construct a Greek house, and property, once the house is built, will own it. The facility will be built on 37th Street and 38th Street, between Spruce and Locust Streets, and will be properly currently owned by two fraternities.

Scientists report sight of Halley's

Viewing of comet first by naked eye

PAISLEY, Calif. — Two scientists at the University of California at Los Angeles and a number of other professionals, including a professional in an observatory, have reported seeing the comet with the naked eye.

"It was first observed by Prof. Charles A. H. T. M. C. at the University of California, Los Angeles. He reports that the comet was first seen by a distant observer looking through a long-sighted telescope. It was also seen by Prof. C. A. H. T. M. C. and a number of other observers at the University of California, Los Angeles. A number of professional astronomers have reported seeing the comet with the naked eye."

Police can’t find projectiles that caused high rise holes

In SULJUNG

Police investigations of High Rise House's east upstairs lounge of a High Rise House room have not turned up any projectiles capable of causing the holes found in the windows of the two rooms.

Laurie said yesterday that police can not identify what caused the holes. She said that the holes were bullets because they found nothing in the area near the incidents or outside the high rise buildings.

"We never found any projectiles, but we don't think it is a bullet," Laurie said.

"Even if a bullet would have gone through the window, I don't think it would look like a 22 caliber bullet," Laurie added.

"On the condition that the holes aren't bullets, you can't be sure of what was fired," she added.

Two holes were found in the east upstairs lounge window last week, along with smashed glass screens around the holes.

The current board members will take a vote on whether or not to renew the lease for the residence hall.

Student Council President Michael Carroll said that he does not know what caused the holes in the glass.

"I have no idea at this point," he said.

"The (Philadelphia Police Department) Crime Lab has not been able to determine what it was or what happened," Carroll added.

A member of the fraternity said that he was disturbed by the hole in the window of his room in the middle of the night.

"I didn't hear anything except for the update of my alarm clock, but that's what caused the holes in the window," said a member of the fraternity.

The board has decided to keep the holes filled for the time being.

"I don't think it is a bullet," Laurie said.

"I am not saying that the rifle club is the only possible source," Laurie said.

"I think it is a bullet," Laurie added.

Laurie said that the club would be held responsible for the hole in the window.

Liberal studies forum set to be held today

By LAURA SHAW
The Liberal Studies Graduate Group will hold an all-day conference today called "The Limits and Uses of Reason."

The discussion will focus on how education and academics are objective processes and how they relate to the "real world."

The program is divided into objectivity, perception, and intuition.

The Liberal Studies Graduate Group, which is a cross-section of researchers from several schools and departments, held its first conference last spring on ways of knowing.

Graduate Professional Development Program Director Nancy Bauer, who organized the program, said yesterday that the conference will examine different perceptions of the world.

"Our assumption is that when someone picks a major or becomes a graduate student, they are committing themselves to their own way of looking at a world view," she said. "Our group is particularly interested in exchanging ideas about world views and methods as we have common interests and common concerns."

"We go through a period of specialization in junior high, senior high, college major and the beginning of graduate study," she added. "At that point there are forces at work to put those pieces together again."

Bauer said that the conference is directed to students and faculty. "We want to open our discussion to members of the faculty who might not be part of our graduate group," she said. "This is deliberately a cross-age day and we're looking for newer ways to do this. This day is aimed at the undergraduate community as much as it is for graduate students."

Philosophy Professor Abraham Feld said last night that he will discuss the issue of rationality and its limits.

"There are all these questions about what is a rational way of doing something," he said. "I will discuss whether there are different ways of doing this. The whole question of objective and subjective, that kind of thing."

"You answer these questions differently depending on what experience you've had, what age you are," Bauer said. "Each of the people who are speaking see things differently."

The speakers will include School of Arts and Sciences Associate Dean Ivar Berg, Religious Studies Associate Professor Ann Matter, Materials Science and Engineering Professor Louis Girifalco, Worldwide Institute Research Center Director Howard Perlmutter and Fine Arts Professor Neil Welliver.

Vietnam Veteran's Memorial

By Michael Schmitt

September 24, 1982

In the haze of American history, the Vietnam Veterans Memorial is an enigma. The names etched on its black granite slabs are a testament to a war that raged for over 20 years in a land far removed from the United States. The names are silent, yet they speak volumes about the sacrifices made by those who fought in the conflict.

The memorial is a place of reflection and哀悼. Visitors walk among the names, paying homage to the fallen. The granite is smooth and cool, a stark contrast to the heat of battle. The place is quiet, save for the occasional cry of a bird or the rustling of leaves.

As I stood there, I was struck by the simplicity of the design. There are no flowers, no flags. Just the names, etched in stone. It's a humbling experience, to be sure. The names are reminders of the pain and suffering endured by those who served.

The Vietnam Veterans Memorial is a reminder that war is not a game. It is a serious matter, with serious consequences. We should never forget the sacrifices made by those who fought in the war.

In conclusion, the Vietnam Veterans Memorial is a powerful reminder of the sacrifices made by those who fought in the war. It is a place of reflection and哀悼, a place to remember those who gave their lives for our country.

Acquaintance rape is more prevalent on campus than it is generally believed. University staff member Dil api. helped organize the first of three workshops on acquaintance rape and is designed to raise consciousness about the issue.

Acquaintance rape is discussed the issue of acquaintance rape and is designed to raise consciousness about the issue.

Ellie Dil.api. who helped organize the session, said that acquaintance rape, "an oft-ignored form of sexual harassment," is often denied by the victims. "Women are taught to be on the lookout for some sense of violation," Dil.api. said. "That's really where their own ability to handle themselves is a situation.

Violence and Security Support Service (VASS) staff member and coordinator of the workshop, said that many women do not report acquaintance rape cases because they think they are times more likely to arise. If a woman who is raped is not responsible, then questions of sexual control should be examined.

"Many women whose rape is 'claimed' as consensual, or whose refusal to consent is consented, are women who have been raped against their will," Dil.api. said. "They are a lot of pressures for men to consent. I think that many times women are raped and not even realize it.

"Men too are in a difficult situation. They are often the ones who are raped. They are often the ones who think they are consensual," Dil.api. said.

And while Dil.api. said she could not precisely determine the number of acquaintance rape cases, she estimated there were number of such cases.

Citing several examples of acquaintance rape that she has encountered, Dil.api. said that women often feel pressured to consent. But one student was expelled and a teaching assistant was committed to a mental institution for acquaintance rape.

North Campus Residential Life Director Ralph Campbell said that a number of students who have participated in the workshops have expressed an interest in counseling.

The films, Campbell said, "look at the issue of acquaintance rape from a male perspective."

"The unique position of a woman," Dil.api. said, "is that she is the victim, but also the responsible party. The relationship between the person who raped and the woman is critical."

"The woman usually doesn't realize that her actions are victimizing others, that more women are going to be sensitive to themselves and evaluate themselves about how to deal with rape," she added.

"Women are often the ones who are raped," Dil.api. said, "and on the city in general. This will benefit everyone concerned."

Dil.api. said last week that he feels the project will gradually expand to occupy an entire floor of the university, but that she is "the heart of the most fascinating business of the month."

Students protest CIA campus visits

By KAREN WEINSTEIN
The Progressive Student Alliance on campus yesterday asked the University to stop recruiting University students.

"The CIA doesn't uphold to the University's own recruiting policies," said Barry Lyons, University student and member of the Alliance. "They impugn the reputation or the jobs." "In the charter for Career Planning and Placement there's a section that states that the center can't be used for recruiting purposes. Being used for this purpose feels like we should not make the University upholds the laws and guidelines that it has been created."

College senior Eric Jonson said yesterday that he opposes the activities of the CIA. "I think that it's a question of recruiting that it's a question of morality, but it's also a question of our interests. We probably think of their targets as people, but we are the ultimate victims of their activities too."

"They engage the reputation of the United States and we are currently targets of their covert operations as students and as persons," he said. "We are opposed to the CIA's activities," he said. "The CIA poisons the atmosphere in the University."

Students forming fraternity

Asiana Executive Director Scott Valley said yesterday that his office is awaiting University approval before reestablishing the fraternity. "At first he was the person to contact," he said. "We would be interested in working as a graduate advisor. We got together a group of guys who sent a letter in October asking us to reestablish Penn. Since then, we write the graduate student advisor and Rebecca's advisor."

Valley said he hopes that the University will grant the fraternity recognition this year. "We wanted to have a chapter at Penn," he said. "It's a good Greek school and we hope someone in this academic year or the next to have the opportunity to recognize the colony."

"We're expanding for the system," he added. "I think it would be beneficial for all."

Speaker pleads of Phila.'s homeless assembly

By BRITTA OBSERVER
Philadelphia City Councilman Dennis F. Reilly yesterday presented a resolution in City Council to declare a 'State of Emergency' for the homeless. The move is seen as a move to bring attention to the plight of those who are homeless.

Although the City Council has not yet voted on the resolution, Reilly said it is a step toward addressing the crisis. "This is a real problem," he said. "We have to do something about it." The resolution would seek to establish a citywide task force to address the needs of the homeless.

Reilly said the city has a responsibility to help those who are homeless, and that the resolution is a necessary step in that direction. "We must take action," he said. "We cannot continue to ignore this problem." The resolution would also call for the creation of a citywide hotline for the homeless, as well as the establishment of a citywide task force to address the crisis.

While the City Council has not yet voted on the resolution, Reilly said he is hopeful that it will be passed. "I believe that the resolution has widespread support," he said. "It is a common-sense approach to a very real problem." The resolution would also call for increased funding for homeless services, as well as the creation of a citywide task force to address the crisis.

Frosh Football loses to Cornell, 26-9

(Continued from back page and it appeared that Cornell would go for the two-pointer, but it appeared that Cornell would go for the lopsided score.)

ThursdaySweet said. "We moved the ball, but we couldn't score." The victories powered an impressive turnaround, but the story line was that we just didn't have our heads in the right place. The score was 26-9, 11-5, 1-5. The Big Red scored in six of the seven first half minutes. The second half minutes. The second half began with the 39yard punt by Lee Oldenburg in the quarter, and the punt was downed on the Cornell 39. The punt was returned to the Cornell 39 for a touchdown.

Patrik Vivial and Donna Berk celebrate a Quaker goal that the team is justifiably proud of. Vivial and Berk are two of the three Quakers whose absence from the starting lineup has played a key role in the Quakers' success.

The Quakers have enjoyed little of the same success. Penn did not start a single player in the first 3-3-1 game against the Quakers.

The Quakers played well against national powerhouses, losing only two games. In their non-league play, the Quakers played as well as they did in the Ivy League, winning five of seven games.

The comeback unfolded in the second half. A goal by Vivial on a penalty shot gave the Quakers a 1-0 lead. New York

The Quakers thrashed the Big Green, 3-0, in their first game of the season. The team played well against national powerhouses, losing only two games. In their non-league play, the Quakers played as well as they did in the Ivy League, winning five of seven games.
