The Five-hour exam, or as he called it the " Scarlett," is an alternative to the regular SAT or ACT exam, has been released previously. It is designed to assess the knowledge and skills of students in the first three years of high school. The exam consists of four sections: Reading, Writing, Math, and Science. Students can take it at any time during their junior or senior year.

The exam is scored on a scale of 400 to 1600, with 800 being the highest possible score. The exam is intended to be easier than the SAT and ACT, with a focus on critical thinking and problem-solving skills. The exam is administered in 30-minute segments, and students are allowed to use an on-screen calculator for the Math section.

Professor Chides Albuquerque for Factual Mistakes

To the Editor:

Youth is a time when the individual is encouraged to empirically discover the ground rules of the game. It is disturbing to learn that Felipe Albuquerque has made such good use of this period. In his recent column "Feminist Faults" (DP, 2/18/84), makes errors in fact that are laughable at least to Albuquerque who is only old enough to date.

Because Albuquerque was the reporter who covered the harassment survey for the DP, however, we have a special desire to have him get his facts right. Reading his column, in fact, reminded me of Mark Twain's comment that those critics who praise James Fenimore Cooper should have the common decency to have read his books.

We are told by Albuquerque that the harassment committee made a mistake in defining harassment. He implies that the frequency of certain types of harassment on campus---other Alpine recognizes that the committee should have approached the problem "analytically." As a test to see if he believes we should focus on identifying who are the harassers and when harassment occurs.

We are told by Albuquerque that because we think the opinion poll is important, it's not. The vote, he says, is on harassment. This is completely different. The frequency of certain types of harassment on campus---other Alpine recognizes that the committee should have approached the problem "analytically." As a test to see if he believes we should focus on identifying who are the harassers and when harassment occurs.

We are told by Albuquerque that the prevention programs are ineffective. As a test to see if he believes we should focus on identifying who are the harassers and when harassment occurs.

The second annual Collaborative One-Act Plays, held at Penn Players and DiYanni's, was well-attended by an enthusiastic, educated audience.

The production included five one-act plays ranging from historical, political, and social to religious and philosophical. These plays were chosen by a panel of judges, including PENNPlay president Lon F. Benowitz. The plays were performed by a variety of Penn students, including students from the English, History, and Political Science departments.

The evening began with a panel discussion about the role of theatre in society. The panelists discussed the impact of theatre on social issues, the role of theatre in education, and the importance of diversity in theatre. The discussion was moderated by PENNPlay president Lon F. Benowitz.

The first play of the evening was "Theater of the Absurd," a political satire about the American political system. The play was performed by students from the English and Political Science departments.

The second play was "Theater of the Absurd," a political satire about the American political system. The play was performed by students from the English and Political Science departments.

The third play was "Theater of the Absurd," a political satire about the American political system. The play was performed by students from the English and Political Science departments.

The fourth play was "Theater of the Absurd," a political satire about the American political system. The play was performed by students from the English and Political Science departments.

The fifth play was "Theater of the Absurd," a political satire about the American political system. The play was performed by students from the English and Political Science departments.

The evening concluded with a reception and award ceremony. The audience was treated to a buffet dinner and drinks, and the winners were presented with awards for their outstanding performances.

Overall, the event was a success, with a packed house and enthusiastic reviews. The collaborative nature of the production was evident in the diverse range of topics covered and the variety of performance styles.

The event was organized by PENNPlay, a student theatre group at the University of Pennsylvania, and was supported by the College of Arts and Sciences and the School of Theater.

The first annual holiday brunch for the Jewish students of Brown. Attendees enjoyed traditional Chanukah foods and décembre songs. The event was organized by the Brown Jewish Student Union.

"It's all very nice," said one attendee. "But we really need a real holiday celebration."

"There's no pressure, no obligation," remarked another. "We're just having fun."

Brown's senior, Kenton Jernigan, has not lost a match in his collegiate career.

"I'm really looking forward to the weekend," tomorrow night's opponent will be Harvard.

"We're a bunch of colorful characters," said one member of the team.

"Our coach is saying there's a trip to Seattle involved," said another.

"We can't wait to see who we're playing," said a third.

"It's a shame that this is the way it has to end," said Ashley.

"I know he's very good," Ballard said. "But I'm not going to let him beat us."

"We're the favorites at 7-3," said the coach.

"And more of a difference between the players," said Ashley.

"I'm just a matter of playing. And if you play better than the other guy, you win.

"It's a shame that this is the way it has to end," said Ashley.

"We surely can beat Penn and the Elis," Ashley said.

"We're in the same place. We'd be back in the same place," said the coach.

"The first notice came out," Ballard said. "But we're not going to let them have it."

"We're the favorites at 7-3," said the coach.

"It's a matter of playing. And if you play better than the other guy, you win."

Yale, Brown provide next challenge for Quakers

Tow Quakers, however, remain questionable for the weekend. Center Abe Ikolerodu is still suffering from back spasms, while freshman forward John Stovall missed practice this week as a result of a gastro-intestinal problem, which may be an ulcer. Brown may well win the league at 9-5. "It's in our hands," Bromwell said. "By no means, though, did we play through cinema in the league."

"We may not get a steak dinner out of it," Brown coach Mike Cagney said. "We're just trying to give him some rest on the back."

When asked where he felt the team stood in the MIAA, Lefkowitz said, "I think right now Princeton's got the best look for point production," he said. "They're gonna have 10 run their you know what's off." The Quakers know the competition will be fierce but agree ready to face the task "We're ready to rain fast," Powell said. "I'll people here, it's not going to be from lack of effort. On that day, they just can better than us, but they're gonna have to run them you know what's off."

But if Peter doesn't perform, the Quakers could end up being the funny guys in those sandwiches.

Coach Wintzel singled out seniors Lisa Freeman and Dawn Friedly for further punishment by "throwing guns into the courts with those with whom they are matched." This strategy has been working because, according to Wintzel, "Freeman has scored so many points every game that Dawn Friedly was running from her female opponent around the court!"

Both Freeman and Friedly are determined that the team will not allow Brown and Yale any easy wins.

"We will not let them win," Freeman said; "and, anyway, they think they will be able to." We are tied from the long season, but people have been working hard this week." Wintzel said. "And we will give them a better match than we could in the long weeks of the season. People match them off, finely adjusted. "We will have a better chance against Brown, partly due to the fact that we're being played for almost two weeks as losers and not used to their courts. Brown's courts are very hot, and they will have a hard time adjusting." W. Track at Heptagonal Championships Saturday, Sunday

By LOIS SCHREITZMAN

Having to win in third consecutive by Longtime title, the Penn women's track team will be traveling to Harvard this weekend to compete in the Heptagonal Championships. The Quakers will be matching their skills against the other ivies as well as Army and Navy.

Going into the meet, Penn hopes to come away at the level of intensity that has brought the Quakers many victories throughout the season. Last week at the New International, the one-mile time trials broke a long-standing record in the 5000m run by senior Brenda McLaughlin and Ken Welsh. This is just a typical example of how the team is doing all season, as the Penn women have on many school records and personal bests.

"We've done extremely well all year," Penn head coach Betsy Comar said. "If the girls continue to do what they have done all year, we have a very good chance of winning."

"I think we'll go at Harvard and come away a champion," Penn senior Santi D'Arco said. "This is our chance to make our mark. We have the personnel to score against everyone and we will be up for the meet. Penn realizes that the other teams are gonnag for them in the meet, that they are the defending champ. We all know that we are the individuals, the tournament winner is it going to take a team effort.

The toughest competition that the Quakers will face this weekend will come from Yale and Army. Penn has already defeated Princeton and Fordham. Going into each event, the Quakers will have the personnel to score points.

"We've had a very outstanding season between cross-country and this year," Comar said. "I'm confident that the team will do very well, as the team has a lot more depth than most of the teams in the competition."

At long last — good health.

The Penn men's swimming team has finally overcome the two main handicaps that have plagued it all season. The Quakers are physically healthy, and they are morally healthy.

As was the case the time that the team of events first took on the team's record books, the Quakers headed into the Heptagonals in the hopeful sets of men's swimming. Now the Quakers' heads are团队 spirit and everything is on the upswing.

In the Heptagonals, the Quakers will compete against Brown, Army, and Navy.

The Quakers (24, 24, Eastern Intercollegiate Swimming League) will compete against the Crimson (20) at Harvard. The team heads to the meet at less-than-full strength. Several of the Penn wrestlers are suffering the effects of the flu, while the rest of the team is fully in shape for the meet. Harvard, on the other hand, the best in the EISL. The Crimson are a team and not individuals. All of the members are one with Harvard. The team heads to the meet at less-than-full strength.

Although Penn did not respond well to pressure against Yale, the Crimson will face a men's team that consists of the top 10 individuals on the team. The Quakers are the last men at Harvard, and the meet will be a great opportunity for the Quakers to show that they are as good as they say they are. Penn will be relying entirely on the performances of the Crimson's division.

"The members of the team are not very close to the individual scorers," Penn junior diver David Cooper said. "If I can score a good time, we'll be able to get into the final." Penn's biggest strength is probably diving. Their diving coach, John Walker, is one of the best-known in the country.

"They have one dive, Davey Watson, who is third in the world in the springboard and two," Penn junior dive coach Frank Cooper said. "If I find second, I'll be very pleased."

The circumstances are almost ideal. But the Princeton women's swimming team was undefeated in the Eastern Intercollegiate Swimming League and No. 1.

But the Quakers handed the Crimson their first loss of the season. Everyone was stunned by Princeton's victory, except the Quakers.

They knew that Harvard was evenly capable, and that the Crimson could not win. Yet, Princeton's performance was so impressive that no one would have learned from her past mistakes. This is not necessarily the case.

One thing is certain: If the Quakers — who are again undefeated in the E.I.S.L. — do beat Princeton, the result could be the same as last year.

Harvard has improved over last season, but are the Quakers? The difference in talent is not enough to make either team the favorite, even though the Crimson are at home.

"We'll try to capitalize on our strengths and move people around," Harvard coach David Stover said. "It's more important for us to win than to do so well.

But it definitely will not be a cake walk for the Quakers.

"Harvard is very strong in every event, especially in the butterfly and backstroke," senior Doreen Bruzen said.

The first event, the 400-yard medley relay, should be very important in setting the tempo for the meet. Because of the strength of the Crimson breaststrokers and divers, Penn will essentially be spending Harvard points. It's difficult to think that any of the Quakers will be able to win any of these events, but they will be 32 points better.

"The first event is a very important one, and we will definitely want to get the team out to their best," senior diver Linda Yver said. "It's a key event because it sets the pace and takes the crowd of the meet."

As the Penn volleyball teams took the court, the "saying the last of the Ivy" and into the weekend could be forgotten. The tournament was over.

Despite that I would really like to see Cornell and interested in seeing the alignment of "Penn bowl," the weekend could not be repeated because, while Cornell is good, Princeton is better.

"Princeton has built a team of teams we've lost," Penn coach Ed Becker said. "But the weekend was a great opportunity for us to see how we stack up."

With the weekend over, the team looks forward to seeing how they will fare against the Crimson. The Crimson's biggest strength is probably diving. Their diving coach, John Walker, is one of the best-known in the country.

"Regrouped" Quakers head to Yale to bid for championship

By MAUREEN DELANY

This weekend: 1st meet

The women's gymnastics team will entertain Yale's Penn Whiten Gymnastics battery to determine the host for which it has been competing throughout the season. With two meets left, Penn is the only team that can push the Quakers to their limit.

The Ivy League championships will mark the second consecutive meet in which Penn will be able to participate. The Quakers are the only team in the league that has never won the Ivy League championship. Penn's team is the only team in the Ivy League that has never won the Ivy League championship.

"The outlook of gymnastics will be very exciting," captain Monday Smith said. "We have probably scored 80 points more in the third and fourth-place teams, which is an average of 80 on all four events. We have scored 100 on three events, so they have always been tough. Penn was scheduled to host the Ivy Championships last year, but the women's varsity team could not host them and Branderup wanted to have them here. However, the women's team will be going to Yale for the championships and the men's club will be held. This did not discourage the Quakers, but it did motivate them to train hard for the next two meets for a preparation for this meet.

"The best chance of the season right now," coach Tom Konig said, "and they are in great spirits. The girls are in complete mastery of their routines and they are confident."

WASHINGTON POS
Quakers hope to buy some time
Penn battles Yale, Brown

By STEFANIE KRAKOW
This is a big weekend in deciding the direction of the men's squash team. The Quakers have been struggling so far this season (6-7, 6-7A), but the Ivy ammo is right around the corner, and the Quakers must step up in this critical time. The Ivy League is always a battle, and the Quakers are one of the best in the nation. This weekend, however, they must prove it.

When the Quakers (10-11, 6-8) take the road to the coast against Yale and league-leading Brown (13-9, 7-3), it could be the turning point for the Quakers and possibly the team as well.

After a week of re-evaluation and improving following a loss last weekend in New England — during which Penn swept three games to Dartmouth (6-4A) and then defeated Harvard (6-5B) — the challenges that Dudley and Turner and their collective teammates will face are enormous.
Moreover, it is, of course, historically the Ivy League that is the toughest in the country.

If the Quakers are to make a move, they must perform. Dudley and Turner are in the Ivy League's top rank, and there are several other players on the team that can contribute as well.

One by one the skeptics will come to an end.

Penn attempts to upset Crimson in bid for title the mark of sports fanatic everywhere — drama. Add to the mix Harvard's men's squash team, winners of three straight collegiate team championships, and the Ivy League.

This is the team that the Penn men's squash men have been waiting for all season. The Quakers have moved up to a respectable position in the Ivy League, having swept previously top-ranked Princeton 7-2.

But this time, it's the Quakers that are going to New Haven, with 5-2 on the line. The Quakers have not lost a single game this season, and they have the potential to do so.
