University clerical workers are due to receive a 6% pay hike next month in a move the administration sees as an attempt to make the University more competitive. They are also hoping the increases could amount to as much as $600, depending on the maximum allowed raise.

Lavin transferred after death threats

By HELEN GYM

Larry Lavin, the University graduate who headed the "upper quad residence security" yesterday out of the U.S. Postal Service in Lawrenceville, Kansas to an administrative post in the State that he was the victim of death threats yesterday against him by other inmates.

According to a Lawrence police spokesman, Lavin, a 1977 College of Arts and Sciences and a 1981 Dental School graduate, was moved out of the minimum security prison to another federal correctional institution.

He has been an inmate at the prison since September, when he was sentenced to a maximum of 42 years in prison for murder and perjury.

Lavin's attorney, Thomas Colangelo, yesterday that his client may have been transferred from the U.S. Bureau of Prisons in California, though calls made to the prison last night were not returned.

Weinberger favors early SDI deployment

WASHINGTON — Conspiring in Congress this week for a $2 billion boost for the Star Wars defense, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger intimated he would make a deal with the other services with him that he favors deploying the shield against nuclear attack sooner than earlier announced.

President Reagan's embattled Star Wars boosters were not yet "on the critical path," Weinberger said in an interview yesterday, although the research was designed to allow further testing and to put the system into operation by 1996 if the work to develop and deploy an anti-ballistic missile defense system is continued.

"I was very fearful that the patience of Congress would be impeached," said Dan Quayle, (R-Ind) who supports Weinberger's plan to increase the Defense Department budget by $28 billion next year, including a $2 billion boost for Star Wars.

"The research was designed to allow further testing and to put the system into operation by 1996 if the work to develop and deploy an anti-ballistic missile defense system is continued." Senator John Tower, (R-Tex), who heads the Senate Armed Services Committee, said Monday, "We are in agreement that the research was designed to allow further testing and that it is not to be deployed at all, but to be used to the fullest extent by 1996 if the work to develop and deploy an anti-ballistic missile defense system is continued."

The president is asking Congress to provide another $300 million to support the research in the fiscal year that starts October 1, 1987, to support the development of a space-based missile defense. In addition, Congress is asked to approve $65.3 billion to support the research in the current fiscal year.

Trustees to discuss New Bolton Harassment proposal also on agenda

By JAY BEGBI

The Board of Trustees will discuss the construction of a Rockefeller Center laboratory to be located at the University's animal facility and other issues at their meeting today.

The agenda for the first full meeting of the Trustees since October includes discussions on racial and sexual harassment and the possible purchase of a 32-acre plot of land in the Darbytown area.

"The trustees are currently surveying the area," said one source. "We're looking at the possibility of bringing in a graduate student to help us with the project."

In June 1985, the Trustees passed a motion, proposed by Assistant Secretary Walter Batty, saying, "We must be very careful about bringing in a graduate student."

Despite the strong fall-off in the number of students in the Darby area, a 32-acre plot of land in the Darbytown area was proposed for purchase by the Trustees.

The "Yuppie Conspiracy," as the Trustees dubbed the area, was not considered to be a problem. The Trustees were concerned about the possibility of having to purchase land for housing students.

"We have to think about the future of the University's animal facility," said one source. "It's not a priority, but it's important."

Students love to hate aerobics

BY CATHERINE SCORNICK

Tara Hansen, a Wharton junior, said that she’s come to think of aerobics classes as a sort of rip-off. "It’s too easy to sit around and do nothing but exercise with music, and I’m much more motivated when I’m with a bunch of other girls. When we do it on your own, you do it kind of half-hearted." Hansen said.

"Taking aerobics is the dullest, least expensive thing I’ve done at Penn," said Jeannine Yarosh, a College sophomore. "I used to sit at home and watch old movies on TV with a box of cookies and a carton of milk. Aerobics made such a huge difference. I’m not all that active, but from what I can see, aerobics is not really a good workout."

"It’s good because I can do it in the comfort of my own home," claimed Yarosh. "I mean, it’s really horrible. I walk and walk and walk and walk. When I play soccer, I’m much fitter."

But like any worthwhile reward, it comes at a price. "I’ve never heard anything in my life," said Yarosh. "I mean, it’s really horrible. I really hate it. I leave and walk into my room. I’m done." Although most of the participants tend to be women, aerobics also attracts some of the male student body. Tara Hanson, a Wharton junior, related his aerobics experience. "I used to come back from a long day of study and throw a box of cookies and a carton of milk. Aerobics made such a huge difference. I’m not all that active, but from what I can see, aerobics is a great workout."

"I’ve noticed that I was in better shape," said Hanson. "I mean, it’s really horrible. I walk and walk and walk and walk. When I play soccer, I’m much fitter."

"It’s kind of a social thing, too," continued Hanson. "I mean, it’s really horrible. I walk and walk and walk and walk. When I play soccer, I’m much fitter."

"My mind, in addition to other parts of my anatomy, were mush."

But Hanson, a friend of Yarosh, has gotten on track, and now goes to a class every night now.

Aerobics made such a huge difference.

"Tara Hannon, a Wharton junior, said. "I’ve seen friends get on track, and now glides through a revitalized daily routine of her anatomy, were mush."

But Hanson, a friend of Yarosh, has gotten on track, and now goes to a class every night now.

Logan has not explained why he did not arrange a full search sooner, saying only, "We gave information to the police before the demonstration started that the person they were looking for was on campus. None of us had any indication of the time that the person was going to show up, only that he was on campus. We later learned that he was on campus all day without telling anyone. We cannot deal with this in a court of law. We can only deal with the facts that we have." The protesters claimed that the police had been negligently directed to the wrong part of campus where the person had not been found.

Robert Cudmore, a law professor, suggested that the police had not been sufficiently diligent in their search. "The police should have been more thorough in their search, especially considering the nature of the supposed suspect," he said. "The police had knowledge of the suspect's location and could have easily found him if they had made a more concerted effort."

The president of the Graduate Student Activities Council, who did not wish to be named, said that the police had not been sufficiently cooperative. "The police refused to follow our lead and instead decided to act on their own," he said. "We had information that the suspect was in the area, but the police ignored it and went on their own, which is unacceptable."

Sonia Gardiner, a member of the student government, said that the police had not provided sufficient information. "The police refused to give us any details about the search, which is unacceptable," she said. "We have a right to know what is going on and the police should be providing us with that information."
Former Polaroid VP gives talk

Compares small and large businesses

By COLIN STRAWS

An ex-Polaroid executive told a university audience last night that it is sometimes more important to what-developed than a flash in the pan.

John Sandbo, a former vice-president of the company, left the corporation to become president of his own company. In his address he discussed the advantages and disadvantages of running a small business compared to a large one.

"The labor rate is low there," he said. "But more importantly, there are favors to corporate presidents."

He had two reasons for leaving the change," he said. "First, I wanted the income — it was used to living at a comfortable level, and more important, it was a very good cover to look for small businesses."

Sandbo's plan worked, and in 1978 he bought twenty percent of the stock of Deccon Corporation, a small industrial equipment manufacturer which had filed for bankruptcy four years earlier.

Under Sandbo's leadership, Deccon has grown substantially and today he is regarded as a model of the small business owner.

"The labor rate is low there," he said. "But more importantly, there are favors to corporate presidents."

"I bought twenty percent of the stock to get a leg up," Sandbo said. "But more importantly, there are favors to corporate presidents."

He also related several anecdotes about his time at Polaroid, including one about a card in his room that read "John Sandbo, President of Deccon Corporation." This became apparent when he noticed the income — he was used to living at a comfortable level, and more important, it was a very good cover to look for small businesses.

"The labor rate is low there," he said. "But more importantly, there are favors to corporate presidents."

Harvard off to early lead

The Penn sports a two-fold advantage over the Lady Raiders. Colgate has been hit recently by a flu bug. They also play Drexel tonight and will have only one day to prepare for Penn, which has been preparing for them since Monday.

FREE THROWS — Penn guard Jerry Simon was awarded by League Referee of the Week honors, salar-y for his performance against Den-vils. The 6-4 forward came off the bench to score 12 points against the Big Green. Simon also recorded five rebounds, one blocked shot, two assists and one steal in 15 minutes of play. Against Harvard, he saw limited time and recorded one steal and one rebound.

could make them even tougher to beat in the second half of the season. "They are extremely talented right now," Lawler said. "They won't fall from the season, and that's because of the great start they had." The Gale Senior Class schedule is in December. The Big Greens are 1-2-0 this season, having beaten Springer and losing big to Brown and Harvard. Take into consideration that they have a new, more experienced coach, and Dartmouth should not present a major problem for the undefeated Quakers.

"Every dual meet is important. We are not in a position to look past any competition, and we don't play teams that we don't have to play either. Every meet is coming out to get you. Against the Big Greens, Lawler plans to shuffle her line-up to give people experience in different events." With college commitments and national try-outs, Lawler said, "I don't expect everyone to do well. We will still be strong."

"We can account for the injuries, and the winners may feel that they are competing against themselves on the deck, rather than against the opposing team. That's the truth of the matter." Lawler continued. "The girls have a lot of confidence in what they can do in the pool." The focus is on where you want to be in the season," Lawler said. "We don't expect a great deal of them to win by a large margin. The wins will fall in place if they are aggressive enough to win."

W. Squash vs. Trinity tomorrow, 2 p.m.

By JEFF KUPOR

After a week of travel and play in Canada, the Penn women's squash team must get down to business as it hosts Trinity College this weekend. Trinity was described by coach Wetzel as "tough," quite an understatement considering that Trinity ranked third in the nation last year.

"Wetzel said, "It's really the only non-Ivy school that can really play the basis competitively."

"It's a great match," assistant coach Dennis Fries, who is playing in the number one spot against Trinity, said, "but we have the home advantage.

"We would like to forget the results of last year's match at Trinity in which the team was severely defeated. It's a new season, but it looks as if the season will remain for the same reason."

The number one player for Trinity has been a runner-up in the National Championships for several years and is, in addition, the only senior on the team this year. According to Wetzel, "They're stronger than last year.

"Penn has two teams back in action for the women's program. "Their program is strong," explained. "Because they get lots of starting coordinators." Another problem lies in the physical state of the Quakers. Penn has lost several players to graduation, and one team member cannot play because he is academically ineligible.

"Wetzel believes that it will be a "small miracle," he said, "for them to win tomorrow."

W. Track at Yale Invitational tomorrow

By JBA APPEL

In its previous season, the men's indoor track team has performed well, with a concentration on both "speed and endurance." As the team returns to action Friday at the Yale Invitational, Wetzel was referring to the Quakers' disappointing sixth-place finish at the-season-ending invitational. As in the Oeofge Mason Invitational, Penn will not field a full team of athletes, as senior distance runner Snek, senior sprints-opener Carrigan, and junior distance runner are all running in the Penn Relays this weekend. Coupled with the team's performance at the Yale Invitational, will likely have the Penn men's track team in the Mid. "We'll see how we compare against other teams that are mostly running teams," Wetzel said.

The Quakers will compete against Ivy opponents. We don't overrate them, but we don't underrate them either. We don't take any team lightly," Wetzel said.

"I think the meet will be very, very competitive," the Penn head coach said. "Both of those teams did a number on us last year."

Wetzel was referring to the "Quakers," not the "Quakers," discussing individual performances of the players. "Quakers have had full in all of these previous meets, yet the competition was not even with the "Quakers," which is Penn's main concern.

"It's a good opportunity for us," Wetzel said. "They're on the rise. If Penn senior sprinter Ready is eligible, it's going to be a definite advantage but not a prerequisite. We have a good shot there. We have great faith in Ready as an anchor."

But the assistant, which the Quakers have more than 100 entries, on the team. The "Quakers" are likely to win the meet. But we don't want to lose the meet, because of the advantages of having a facility, they are going to be hard to beat," Wetzel said. "Perhaps it's in the long run it gives them an edge."

"There have been a couple of our kids who have just made up their minds about the things that the Fish are doing. They are beginning to train hard," Wetzel said. "We can't see how competitive their teams are until the meet." After the meet they will know what the season holds for them.

After a loss of four that month since last meet, the Penn women's indoor track team will return to action tomorrow at the Yale Invitational.

"At most where our scores will be kept, the Quakers have a strong field including the track, field, and throwers, and they are doing very well," Wetzel said, "but we didn't have a lot of the young boys who have not been close to the top."

The meet is a test of what the team is good at. It's going to come down to one of the relays. I would hope that we can win the meet, but we don't want to lose it either."

The team is composed of about 50% of the Quakers who were at the Yale Invitational last year, about 20% who have never competed in an invitational, and about 20% who have not been chosen for an invitational. According to Wetzel, "The girls are mentally tougher right now," he said, "they want to see how they perform on the field, and they are happy with the recent winning."

"We need to produce in the field events," she said. "At this point, we are doing very well."

"But I expect everyone to do well. We will still be strong." Wetzel added. "It's going to be a small miracle," he said, "for them to win tomorrow."

Fortsch rolls on despite injuries

As a basketball player, the heart is the most important part of a basketball player. In that, the Quakers (8-4, 7-3 Ivy) have been performing well. Fortsch is the cornerstone of the Quakers' line-up and has been leading the team in scoring.

The Quakers' hopes for a national championship season were dealt a blow when Fortsch suffered a serious knee injury during a game against the Dartmouth Big Green (7-2, 3-7 Ivy) last weekend. Fortsch, a senior forward, was forced to sit out the remainder of the season due to the injury.

"We're going to miss him a lot," said head coach Dick Bollerman. "He's a key player for us." Fortsch was averaging 16.5 points and 8.5 rebounds per game before the injury.

Despite the setback, the Quakers have continued to perform well. "We have some good players," said Bollerman. "We're going to have to rely on them more."

In addition to Fortsch, the Quakers will miss the play of senior guard Matt Martin, who is out for the season due to a knee injury sustained in practice the previous week.

The Quakers (2-8) face a tough challenge on Saturday against the Princeton Tigers (9-6, 7-3 Ivy), who are currently second in the Ivy League standings. "We have to be prepared," said Bollerman. "This is a tough game."
