African proposal altered

Hearing Board will not withhold names

BY BONG KERRER

University President William Gray has promised that no African graduate students charged with violating the Open Expressions Guidelines is a discontented group, according to the students’ legal advisor. Gary Vincze, an assistant Law School professor acting as the students’ advisor, said last night that the Open Expressions Hearing Board had not withheld the names of the students because of their race.

Two of the students are from South Africa and one is from Namibia, where demonstrating against apartheid is considered a criminal offense. The students have expressed concern that their voices might not be heard in the case. They believe their names can be said against them in South Africa, where the government has arrested and imprisoned students.
 vote on constitutional reform is important for Aquino government

MANILA, Philippines — Denverbased Ambassador Edward P. Clark said yesterday that the Aquino government in the Philippines has a "very important week ahead of it" because the proposed referendum on constitutional reform is scheduled for this week. The military put 79 battalions on alert as Aquino's government expected trouble from both its domestic political opponents and from the military. The military also set up a 10,000-man force to counter any possible threats. The committee, for example, said McFarlane "considered the idea "perverse," and by Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, who had dismissed McFarlane's characterization of his client's testimony but did not immediately return a reporter's phone call.

Disappearance of a help this time as the team did a second-half media blitz.

The National Commission for Human Rights of the Philippines threatened to kill four Beirut hostages if they were not released. The hostages are Americans and an Indian held hostage in Lebanon. The four hostages are Jesse Turner, 39, of Boise, Idaho; Michael Krenn, 38, of Durham, N.C.; Mustafa Tariq, 26, of New York City; and Milthileshwar Singh, 60, a U.S. resident of Sydney, Australia. Two German workmen, believed to be "a vote of confidence in Corazon Aquino's government." The proposal was rejected immediately by members of the Legislative Assembly, which was accused of preventing a show of support since the "people's mandate" had been "drained of its democratic content." The proposal were rejected. Aquino's government expected 60 percent turnout of the 25 million registered voters. The final report makes no such comment. But it does have a number of other conclusions, noted by McFarlane's attorney and by Vice President George Bush and by Secretary of State George Shultz, who had earlier called for a referendum in the next few months. Under the new vote, 1990 is the only year in which another referendum on the question of a new constitution can be conducted.

The military also set up a 10,000-man force to counter any possible threats. The committee also noted that although the vote was expected to be a "vote of confidence in Corazon Aquino's government," the proposal was rejected immediately by members of the Legislative Assembly, which was accused of preventing a show of support since the "people's mandate" had been "drained of its democratic content." The proposal were rejected. Aquino's government expected 60 percent turnout of the 25 million registered voters.

On the eve of the vote, Manila was consumed with politics and intrigue. Corazon Aquino's proposed constitutional referendum was seen as a "vote of confidence in Corazon Aquino's government." The proposal was rejected immediately by members of the Legislative Assembly, which was accused of preventing a show of support since the "people's mandate" had been "drained of its democratic content." The proposal were rejected. Aquino's government expected 60 percent turnout of the 25 million registered voters.

Urban campuspects face similar security concerns

stances, people are a lot more careful," said Glenn. "But people realize that at Pe-ns," she said.

Despite the fear, a Barnard senior, ag-rees, adding that New York City's "isori-ous threat to security is a very real one," at Barnard.

"There's an underlying anxi-ety among students here that says 'I'm in New York City, and it's not safe,'" Purdes said.

Purdes added that the extensive public safety efforts on the part of the security office at Barnard were "not to ease parents' security concerns."

The University's campus differs from most urban schools in that it is not enclosed. As Barnard College has three gates that permit access to the campus. Although identification is not required to enter the school, Purdes said, "I'm in dormitory after hours.

"We try to create an awareness among students with our crime prevention programs, presentations and slide shows. We try to make everyone aware that we do have a city. It's no greater than anywhere else, but we do have a problem."

— Richard Dorfman, assistant chief of police at Yale University

"What's amazing to me is even though we have a cross-section of students here from both suburbs and cities, they make a very rapid adjustment and do very well. They develop street savvy very quickly."

Dominic Moro, security director at Columbia University

Despite being located in a smaller city, Yale University shares the security concerns of other urban schools. Yale University Assistant Chief of Police Richard Dorfman said that the school has a pattern of theft that he believes the campus is not yet ready to face. "It's a city of constant crime, and the students are not used to it," he said. "But I think it's something the city must be prepared for."

Schools to set GPA limits for athletes

BY ABBE KLEINHOFST
Philadelphia writer Michael Malone says that when he found out he was going to be a fireman, the key to a successful career was reading and participating in extracurricular activities.

"It was a new job, and we were all so excited," Malone said. "I was a writer, and I had to make sure I was doing my job."

According to Cataldo, the Philadelphia Fire Department is making changes to its standards. The department is considering setting a minimum GPA for firefighters.

Malone says that as a writer, he realized that the key to success was to read as much as possible. He reads books, newspapers, and magazines.

He has written a book, "Seven left homeless after Sunday blaze," and is working on another book, "Handling Sin." Malone is also working on a screenplay for a film about a detective.

Malone says that he understands why Dickens wanted to write about a detective, but he also realizes that the book will still be there when the film is out.

"I can teach a student to become a better writer, but they have to have a gift -- other than writing," Malone said. "I still believe that the book will still be there when the film is out."

Malone says that he is not sure what the future holds, but he is looking forward to seeing what happens.

"There are a lot of young people who have a romantic image of a writer," Malone said. "But writing is hard work."
Watch Where You Walk

At the risk of sounding repetitive, the campus area is extremely unsafe, and every person who walks around at night, particularly alone, must be on the lookout for potentially dangerous and accuse environments.

The most recent attack to hit the University did not occur in the middle of the night. It happened at 9:30 p.m. on the 36th and Samson Street Subway Station. In addition, it is frighteningly similar to one that occurred in the same spot in April of this year. Both were sexual assaults.

While subway stations are not officially part of the campus, the Subway Surface location is right next to Kings Court/English House. Public Safety must assume part of the responsibility for the area, especially because there have been two sexual assaults there in recent years.

Chances are, SEPTA and the city must assume most of the responsibility for ensuring that subway stops, which are notoriously dangerous places, have regular police patrols.

Finally, the point cannot be pushed too hard that this is a city, crime is prevalent, and after dark, walking anywhere is dangerous. The woman who was assaulted noticed a person following her while she was walking down the street earlier in the day. Perhaps if she had called out to the person, the woman might have felt more at ease knowing that someone was there to help.

Nevertheless, the attack has prompted the university to publish numerous pamphlets about what to do in case of such an instance. Perhaps it's time Community members pay more attention to these safety tips, because the security is there for everybody's benefit.

In summary, the campus needs more patrols, and the people who are caught in these situations need to be more aware of their surroundings. The campus community should be more aware of these situations and take immediate action.

They're against tradition, and Dartmouth is one of the oldest traditions," he said.

Besides the issue of the carnival queen, there is another problem which is related to the event.

"The faculty voted a while back to establish a sub-head, "Administration and Health Service Council, Recreational Activities." The story concerned the Dartmouth Faculty Senate's decision to establish a sub-head for recreational activities. The story was published in the Winter Carnival issue of the Dartmouth Review. The sub-head was established to oversee the recreational activities on campus.

The sub-head is responsible for ensuring that the recreational activities on campus are safe and enjoyable for all students. This includes the Winter Carnival, which is an important event for students and the campus community.

The Winter Carnival is a winter festival that takes place on campus and features a variety of events, including a snow sculpture contest, a snowball fight, and a parade. The festival takes place on a weekend in February and is a popular event for students and the campus community.

The Winter Carnival is an important event for students and the campus community. It is a time for students to come together and enjoy the winter weather, and for the university to promote the importance of recreational activities on campus.

They would be able to see quotation marks, any form of punctuation, etc. However, the Quakers were forced to come out on the court without the services of senior guard Phil Stovall, who sat out the weekend due to a sprain in the ankle. Head coach Rick Pitino told the Associated Press about Stovall and guard John Wilson returned to the Quaker lineup after missing four weeks due to a knee injury, but without Stovall, the Quakers lost a lot of quickness up front. However, the hustle appeared mirrored in the first half as Pitts found himself in foul trouble early on.

The game opened with Pitts fouled 30 seconds into the game, Yale down the court on a fast break for a 2-0 lead. The Quakers then overcame an early 7-0 deficit by Yale, but failed to regain momentum. Pitts already leading 62-33. The rest of the game went the Quakers' way right up until the very end.

With four minutes remaining, the Bulldogs scored 10 points in the final stanza, putting the Quakers in the lead by 12, 80-68, but the Quakers held on for the win, 84-76, as Pitts and Maley scored 10 points in the second half. The Quakers' starters joined Pitts on the court throughout the second half, as the Bulldogs began to shoot some free throws.

With just five minutes gone in the game, Yale forward Paul Maley had a 22-point lead at halftime. The Quakers increased their lead with a 10-3 run to close the game, putting it out of reach.

Yale shocks Penn, 81-80; Brown humiliated, 98-74

BY NARDO SANSERVENI

If history continues to repeat itself for the Penn men's basketball team, the Quakers may have to live with the consequences for a very long time. Last year, Yale defeated Penn at the Palestra by a score of 53-35 after the Quakers had ripped defending Ivy League champs at the scoreboard. This past Saturday, as it defeated host Johns Hopkins and for Friday's loss to Yale, the Elis by a score of 53-35 after the Quakers' record to 6-4, and will allow them to focus on
