Financial aid will not match hike in tuition

By RAY BEHN

Financial aid will not match a hike in the average American student's living costs, according to a new report issued yesterday by the University of Pennsylvania's financial aid director.

"Generally, family incomes for students east of the Mississippi River are keeping up with the average in the United States, but not with changes in the cost of living," said William Schilling, financial aid director. "Every year, we meet with a growing need for additional funds on the part of student families, and a growing ability of the university to afford an education in the same fashion.

"I don't think the tuition increase will have a marked impact, but that doesn't mean it won't have some impact." Schilling added. "I don't think the increase will be done in the same way, but the university's ability to afford education in the same way, but it will be done in the same ways." Schilling said.

"Unrestricted aid will come from a variety of sources, including grants and scholarships. However, the federal government, the state, and the university will all play a role in providing financial aid to students." Schilling said.

"The amount available for unrestricted aid will remain relatively the same as in previous years, Schilling added. "The amount available for work-study has remained the same." Schilling said.

"In the future, for the next academic year, which will be the fifth year for unrestricted aid, approximately 65 percent of the $50 million in unrestricted aid will come from the federal government. The amount is not expected to change in the future," Schilling said.

"The university has made a commitment to provide financial aid to students, and we will continue to do that," Schilling said. "The university will continue to provide financial aid to students, and we will continue to do that." Schilling said.

Baker holds top $700G

FORT MILL, S.C. — Evangelist Jim Bakker, who in 1984 founded a Palmetto, S.C., home while conducting televised prayer vigils in which he claimed to banish the AIDS virus from believers, has lost big backers and his full-time televangelism, and he has been facing a lawsuit.

Yesterday, Baker's lawyers said that Bakker, who had been ordered by a judge to pay the $700,000 in damages awarded to the company, had agreed to a settlement of $150,000.

In 1984, Bakker was ordered by a judge to pay the $700,000 in damages awarded to the company, but he has not paid.

Tashjian explained that he performs two main tasks in the Partnership. He acts as an advisor and liaison between the city and merchants to plan their future. Currently, the Partnership is trying to fund a project between the Philadelphia Community Business Development Center, operating through the West Philadelphia Partnership.

"If we had another five years we could help the merchants better," Greenberg said. "We may try to find other sources of money if the city doesn't come through." The source of financial aid will probably be identified by the Partnership in the next year. The Partnership hopes to have the city continue its involvement with business development in the area, as well.

Greenberg felt that city businesses have been used as a crutch by the merchants. "The merchants can use me as a free resource," he added. "The merchants can use me as a free resource."

Tashjian added that the community has been meeting additional expenses because the city has invested $5 million in the rehabilitation of the 52nd Street shopping district. The police department currently has a mounted officer to enable residents and merchants to get comfortable and to have a police presence in the area. However, "There are a lot of drug pushers in and around 52nd Street and Market," Blackwell said. "It's very hard, but we try."

"The whole idea of our program is to ensure self-sufficiency for the future of businesses," Greenberg explained. "This includes dealing with the problems of crime and street vending and getting the merchants to work together and make the stores self-sufficient so that they will survive the shopping area similar to a mall."

Tourist and many others in the area are not being met. "There are a lot of pickpockets, drugs and people walking to the area is mostly built up, and I feel that the area has changed," added Tashjian.

"We don't have a good mix of stores for the residents," Lee said. "There are a lot of break-ins - on the area," "The area is mostly built up, and I feel that the area has changed," added Tashjian. African nationalist and political science professor Ali Mazrui speaking at Irvine Auditorium last night

"I once felt aggrieved that the U.S. government told Jews, "Never forget you are a Jew," the slave system told Africans, "Forget that you are African; remember that you are black."" he said. Mazrui pointed out that the policies of the Reagan administration, while not specifically supporting apartheid, "were used to saturate." Nonetheless, he expressed optimism over the recent Congressional approval of sanctions against South Africa despite Reagan's opposition.

"At the moment, there is still much amnesia" will Afro-Americans be able to influence American policy toward Africa. "At the moment, there is still much amnesia" will Afro-Americans be able to influence American policy toward Africa.

Mazrui emphasized the need for a "reawakening" of black heritage in America in a speech last night, he said. "Jews are better able to influence American policy than blacks are at making Gentiles feel guilty about slavery." "At the moment, there is still much amnesia" will Afro-Americans be able to influence American policy toward Africa.

Although apartheid has brought about a "collective awakening of Afro-American identity as "displaced Africans." He commented that while the U.S. continues to favor Israel today, it remains "indifferent over the recent Congressional approval of sanctions against South Africa despite Reagan's opposition," he said. "Maybe Congress is finally beginning to give some attention." Mazrui expressed hope that Afro-Americans will influence American policy makers to help improve the situation of blacks in South Africa. Yet he said that the former racial war is an essential part of the resolution of apartheid.

As they now exist, elections for Senior Class board positions are a farce, and everyone seems to want it that way, including the current senior class board and the candidates themselves. It has traditionally been the policy of whoever happens to be in charge of the elections each year that candidates are not permitted to talk to or be quoted in The Daily Pennsylvania. This ensures that no voting junior knows what any of the candidates stand for— if they can possibly stand for anything when the only issues at stake are to half nobody cares about. Why do we need a Senior "Class President" on his or her resume. The job of class president, along with the other senior class positions, carries with it little responsibility and not much glory either.

A campaign for senior class president, vice president or representative now consists of a person simply plastering his or her name on as many trees, walls and bulletin boards as possible. That way, when students go to vote, they will see those names whose names are embelished in their subconsciences. The idea behind the quote bane is to give everyone a fair shot at getting elected. But the fact is that as things stand now, the determining factor is how many people a candidate knows and how many votes he can get.

He helps us if he's on the team or name it or else it good looking and stands on Locust Walk making sure potential voters and this.

What harm would it do if candidates were allowed to be quoted? For one thing, it would most likely become glaringly obvious that there is nothing worth quote there about, because the positions are so lacking in substance. A simple interview might as well as follows:

DP: "So, Candidate, how will you be unique as class president?"

Candidate: "Well, I am in favor of senior smashes with music and fun of drinks."
The fear of the elections committee that if candidates are allowed to be quoted, it'd just get more and more than others. But that's politics the American way, folks. Out in the open. Until it makes its way to the University, we'll just have to wonder which candidate favor beer and which favor highballs. And to me the slightest chance there actually is a candidate with some higher ideal of what can be done with the af-

The Key to Health and Happiness at Student Health

By Marjorie Collins

Have you seen a recent TV commercial that shows a young couple walking right up to a computer, get ready to type in the password, and then someone comes between them and knocks away the keyboard? This is the message of the campaign "Return to the Basics" that problematises the issue of technology and health.

In order to maintain a healthy lifestyle, students need to be aware of the impact of technology on their health. This campaign encourages people to take the time to disconnect from their devices and re-connect with the world around them. By doing so, they can improve their mental and physical health.

Benefits of disconnecting:

1. Reduced stress and anxiety:
   - When you disconnect from technology, you reduce the constant influx of notifications and emails, which can be particularly stressful if you're constantly checking your phone.
   - It can also help with sleep, as blue light from screens can disrupt your sleep cycle.

2. Improved focus:
   - By turning off notifications and social media, you'll be able to concentrate better on the task at hand.
   - It can help with productivity and effectiveness, allowing you to get more done in less time.

3. Increased physical activity:
   - Walking away from your devices encourages you to move and explore the world around you.
   - It can be particularly beneficial if you choose to take a walk or engage in a physical activity like yoga.

4. Better mental health:
   - By reducing the amount of time spent on social media, you'll be less exposed to negativity and comparisons with others.
   - It can also help reduce feelings of isolation and loneliness.

5. Increased appreciation for nature:
   - Spending time away from screens allows you to really appreciate the beauty of the natural world.
   - It can be particularly beneficial if you choose to spend time outdoors or in a green space.

So, take a break from your screens and enjoy the benefits of disconnecting. Your body and mind will thank you.

The King is Dead

I’ve been under the gun, but I don’t have to tell you that. Anyone who can sit and listen knows that I’m tight-lipped. I used to avoid you, and now I find myself unable to sound off, but if you think I’d be able to go back to those days... I’m 53, and I miss you. I was 30, and you’re not. It’s a hard thing to say, but I miss you. I was 30, and you’re not. It’s a hard thing to say, but I miss you.

World history was written in blood, sweat, and tears. We were not the first to lay down our lives, but we were the last to do so. We were not the first to lay down our lives, but we were the last to do so. We were not the first to lay down our lives, but we were the last to do so.

The world is a tough place, and you know that. You know that life is not easy, and you know that death is always around the corner. You know that life is not easy, and you know that death is always around the corner. You know that life is not easy, and you know that death is always around the corner.

I hope this helps. I hope this helps. I hope this helps.

Holocaust survivor recalls camps
Detailed speech vividly describes horror

By ABE KLEINBERG
When John Fox was 16 years old, he could barely walk and weighed only 67 pounds. In May 1945, he was crammed into a cattle-car along with his brother and hundreds of other children, heading for a Nazi death camp.

But fate intervened when partisans derailed the train, killed the German guards and hid the children with local farmers until the train was pulled into the camp.

Fox, at the time a veteran of eight concentration camps, survived the Holocaust. Six million Jews, including his mother and sister, did not.

The survivor, who related his camp experiences in a talk Monday night at Harvard College, said that he was reluctant to tell his experiences in person for many years.

"I went out of my way not to associate with Holocaust survivors," he told the 60 students present at Harvard'suish House. "I did not want anyone to pity me or to give me a job or to help me because I was a survivor."

During the ninety-minute speech, Fox's eyes were filled with emotion, though it was voice quivered with anger.

He explained that after the war he lived in England and was reluctant to force the issue on his new family. He also discussed that people did not want to know about the Holocaust. But in the late 1960's, after immigrating to the United States, Fox said that he felt compelled to share his experiences because of the millions of survivors wanted to tell their experiences.

"I owe this to you," he said. "If you got sick, maimed or killed, you should speak out."

"And in 30 minutes if you're not."

What people have to understand is that when he was time to go to the train station, the guards would say to the prisoners, 'We want the prisoners' eyes only, k-jj.

Financial aid growth lags behind tuition

"We are at a loss of support," Golden explained. "People step up, and it keeps as revenue."

"The (former wallwriters) believe in what they do," Golden explained. "When you work for something you believe in, you show people that it works."

According to Golden, the program helps small artists as the artists, and the participants are happy about the experience they are gaining from the program. "Everyone has his own specialties, and these guys are growing up," Golden said. "They're doing it on their own." Theodore Harris, a former wallwriter, said previously that he could do his work at the Science Center exhibit and be growing up. "The good thing about murals is that they're a statement," Harris said. "What's happening in my neighborhood is we go into an area, they're defaced in trash areas."

Harris said, "I never really picked up a paycheck before."

"If you look at relative financial aid packages, they have improved, but they may not improve as much next year," Stine said. "We are very much involved in trying to advertise the financial aid options for specfic students.

The most important thing in the financial aid process, Stine said, "is our ability to gather information to put people in the most critical positions."

He added that the Penn Plan offers a variety of avenues for funding a college education. The Penn Plan is a financial planning offers loans with variable interest rates as well as a budgeting program to assist families with potential financial aid. But because of the fiscal problems facing the state and University, the plan does not predict that help will be available for families using the plan does not predict that help will be available for families. However, he added that the plan has been funded and money will still be available for student loans and loan assistance.

Financial aid recipient and Wharton sophomore Michael Huntzsch said last spring that he was able to pay last year's 7.7 percent tuition increase, adding that he does not feel the 4.5 percent rise this year is unreasonable. "I don't think a small increase will be too bad of financial aid," Huntzsch said. "I don't think that's too much of a burden."

He added that the financial aid package has increased for the past two years at the same rate as tuition increases.

Theodore Harris, a former wallwriter, said previously that he could do his work at the Science Center exhibit and be growing up. "The good thing about murals is that they're a statement," Harris said. "What's happening in my neighborhood is we go into an area, they're defaced in trash areas."

Harris said, "I never really picked up a paycheck before."

"If you look at relative financial aid packages, they have improved, but they may not improve as much next year," Stine said. "We are very much involved in trying to advertise the financial aid options for specfic students.

The most important thing in the financial aid process, Stine said, "is our ability to gather information to put people in the most critical positions."

He added that the Penn Plan offers a variety of avenues for funding a college education. The Penn Plan is a financial planning offers loans with variable interest rates as well as a budgeting program to assist families with potential financial aid. But because of the fiscal problems facing the state and University, the plan does not predict that help will be available for families using the plan does not predict that help will be available for families. However, he added that the plan has been funded and money will still be available for student loans and loan assistance.

Financial aid recipient and Wharton sophomore Michael Huntzsch said last spring that he was able to pay last year's 7.7 percent tuition increase, adding that he does not feel the 4.5 percent rise this year is unreasonable. "I don't think a small increase will be too bad of financial aid," Huntzsch said. "I don't think that's too much of a burden."

He added that the financial aid package has increased for the past two years at the same rate as tuition increases.

Quakers manage only two wins in 7-1 loss

By LEN SEMANOW

There are those teams which suffer from on-field problems, and other that have a personality conflict. The Penn softball team is 15-4 this season, but its final score of 7-1, its third loss of the season, is the result of a long, hot and humid day in West Chester. The Quakers were held to a single run in each of the last three innings of the game, but still managed to score a couple of runs against the potent Heps defense.

Penn hopes to avenge last year's loss to Midshipmen

By WILLIAM BROWN

Following last week's dominating victory over the Naval Academy, the Quakers were facing their first real test of the season. The game was a battle between two teams who had been dominant in their respective conferences, but were looking to prove themselves on the national stage. The Quakers were able to come out on top, winning 14-of-15 attempts in the first half, and ultimately defeating Navy 92-73 in the semifinals at Madison Square Garden. "I think we played a game against us and we did it at a high level," said head coach Tim Legler. "We didn't make many mistakes and we played well in the second half."

No team in the country can play like they try to," said Tim Legler, "and Tim Legler was hitting at least 50% tonight in scoring, as he did in the first half in scoring, as he did in the second half."

"We knew they were a grinding team that's been around the block," said Legler. "We knew they were going to try to take advantage of our inconsistencies, and we didn't play well in the second half."

The Quakers, led by Legler and Tarr, hit 14-of-15 attempts in the first half in scoring, as they did in the second half.
