Some long distance companies promise you the moon, but what you really want is dependable, high-quality service. That's just what you'll get when you choose AT&T Long Distance Service, at a cost that's a lot less than you think. You can expect low long-distance rates, 24-hour operator assistance, clear connections and immediate credit for wrong numbers. And the assurance that virtually all of your calls will go through the first time. That's the genius of the AT&T Worldwide Intelligent Network. When it's time to choose, forget the gimmicks and make the right choice: AT&T.

Unfortunately, I don't want a lot of hype. I just want something I can count on.
The Securities and Exchange Commission filed civil insider trading charges yesterday against Wharton graduate Michael Milken and the investment firm Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc.

Milken, who is the head of Drexel Burnham's junk bond unit, received his MBA from the Wharton School in 1979. Last September, he gave $2 million to the school through the M. and L. Milken Foundation.

The 184-page civil complaint, filed at U.S. District Court in New York, alleged "fraudulent conduct involving insider trading, stock manipulation, fraud on Drexel's own clients, failure to disclose beneficial ownership of securities and numerous other violations."

The SEC had said previously that it planned to file a civil complaint against Drexel but had not released details.

The charges capped months of speculation that the government had assembled an extensive case against the firm as a result of the investigation into Wall Street abuses spawned by the Boesky insider trading scandal.

According to the complaint, Drexel and Milken, of Encino, Calif., had a secret arrangement with Boesky, who was forced nearly two years ago to surrender a record $100 million in penalties and illegal profits from trading on insider information.

The suspense is over. The talk has ceased. Expectations are high, but so is the tuition.

Indeed, no one has to tell us that this year's freshman class is (again) a collection of "diverse" students. We've all heard those words too many times.

Now, with their arrival on campus, their education will finally begin. But before they delve into their chemistry books or hide in their accounting

If you have come to college to slack off in the back sun for a few miles you may be able to pull off — if you are lucky enough to fit into one of college's vulgar social patterns. But we do not educate you about humanity from the passenger seat, almost ready to grip the steering wheel.

So welcome to the University of Pennsylvania and remember not to become so self-centered that you lock yourself out.

The freshmen who packed Irvine Auditorium for the event greeted them well. "They will pass very quickly — use them well," President Sheldon Hackney, Provost Michael Aiken and Acting Vice President for University Life Kim Morisson each addressed the approximately 2,000 freshmen, while Faculty Senate Chairman David Frank brought greetings from the faculty.

Hackney continued the traditional "movie review" theme of his convocation speech, discussed the film "Tucker" and the "unresolved conflict between the pursuit of profit and the unity of your class will be shaped by the actions you take, the choices you make over the next four years," he added. "The next four years should be a time of challenge, discipline, learning and hard work," the provost said. "They will pass very quickly — use them well."

"You will establish your class identity through a new set of values in our history." He also said that students will face a reference for one very own story of Preston Tucker, who developed a prototype automobile in the 1940s considered years ahead of its time. He was forced out of business by a conspiracy involving the "Big Three" automakers and a United States senator. While he mentioned several other films, Hackney focused on the film "Tucker," describing it as "not only an allegory of greed, but I think, also a cautionary tale."

"Tucker" is based on the true story of Preston Tucker, who developed a prototype automobile in the 1940s considered years ahead of its time. He was forced out of business by a conspiracy involving the "Big Three" automakers and a United States senator.

The provost also compared the first five days of the University experience now with the experience of the Class of 1942, saying "you will establish your class identity through a new set of values and core beliefs." He also said that █████ "Betrayed," a "movie review" theme of his convocation speech, discussed the film "Tucker," and the "unresolved conflict between the pursuit of profit and the unity of your class will be shaped by the actions you take, the choices you make over the next four years," he added.

Computer malfunction causes drop/add snafus for 400 frosh

By DAVID BORGENICHT and AMY GARDNER

Students have never had it easy. But this year, 400 of them had additional hurdles to overcome when a computer malfunction led them to be double-scheduled.

According to University Registrar John Sumsen, the "drop/add" process was designed to accommodate the diverse needs of students. However, a software problem, but added that a failure to check a manual prior to their discovery contributed to the complications.

"We've frequently had trouble with the system before," Sumsen explained. "It's very old, and it's very temperamental."

Sumsen added that a new registration system, allowing students to choose their classes over the telephone, will be instituted in the spring. He said that the new system should help resolve some of the problems encountered this year.

Students will be able to prioritize and ask for more courses, and will receive their schedules more quickly.

Med student takes lethal drug dose

By BRETT MITCHELL

Philadelphia police discovered the body of a second-year Medical student last month who apparently committed suicide last fall because of the stress of his second semester.

Public Safety inspectors Sylvia Caudill and_Ina_Parkins discovered the body of David Kim, a 22-year-old student living in the University of Pennsylvania dorms.

Kim said that police found a note in his room stating, "I am a suicide and that I was determined to die because I was alive."

Kim's brother received the drug from a laboratory in which he worked. "I would not have taken it if I had known that it could be lethal," Kim said.

Kim's brother told police that he had taken a sample of the drug and not trying to kill himself.

Kim was living in the dorms since last year. Police officers found the body of David Kim, a 22-year-old student living in the University of Pennsylvania dorms.

Sonnenchein assumes leadership of SAS

Sonnenchein was one of the most visible leaders at Princeton, winning recognition as an accomplished economics professor who studied the macroeconomy and the global financial system. He is a strong voice on matters of public concern, and his support of the University's initiatives has been a hallmark of his tenure.

Sonnenchein has emphasized the importance of interdisciplinary collaboration and the need for the University to maintain its tradition of excellence in both the arts and sciences. He has also been a strong advocate for the development of new courses and programs that will prepare students for a rapidly changing world.

Sonnenchein's appointment as SAS dean is significant because it represents a key role in the University's strategic planning. SAS is a major resource for the University, providing funding to support a wide range of initiatives.

Sonnenchein's appointment is also significant because it reflects the University's commitment to diversity and inclusion. He is the first non-white dean to lead SAS, and his appointment is seen as a signal of the University's continued progress toward a more inclusive and equitable campus.

Sonnenchein's role as SAS dean will be to work closely with the University's leadership and the development office to identify new sources of funding, including the development of new courses and programs that will support the University's mission.

Sonnenchein's appointment is a major development for the University, and it is expected to bring new energy and momentum to the University's efforts to maintain its position as a leader in higher education.

A great university.
A great newspaper.
And 6 great ways to get involved.

Want excitement? The opportunity to meet new people? The chance to learn by doing, not by watching? Join the Daily Pennsylvanian.

The DP, the 104-year-old daily newspaper of the University of Pennsylvania, is one of the top college newspapers in the United States. In fact, the Columbia Scholastic Press Association in 1987 named the DP one of the two best college dailies in the country.

Students, faculty and administrators look to us as their main source of news and information about the University and West Philadelphia. Local businesses see us as the most cost-effective way to present their message to the lucrative Penn market.

Most importantly, the DP — a corporation independent of the University — is run and managed by students. Students just like you. Every day, we write and edit the stories, shoot and develop the photographs, lay out and put together the news pages. Every day, we sell and design the advertisements, handle customer inquiries, and develop budgets and financial statements.

As a DP staff member, you'll get the opportunity to learn in the trenches, to apply what you've learned in the classroom to the real world. From reporting to shooting photographs to selling advertisements to designing pages, you don't watch — you do.

Through all of our departments, you'll begin doing from day one. All you need is enthusiasm, imagination, and drive — we'll teach you the rest.

EDITORIAL

Last year one of our writers broke a story about strippers at fraternities that resulted in the suspension of two houses and the probation of two others. Other writers reported on the campus visit of Minister Louis Farrakhan, one of the most controversial black leaders in America. We sent writers to cover the Iowa caucuses and the New Hampshire primary.

Overall, the DP generates more original stories about campus life and events than any other college newspaper in the country.

Our sportswriters travel to venues all over the country to cover 27 intercollegiate sports, including the NCAA basketball tournament, Ivy League championships, and Big Five basketball. On the home front, DP reporters cover Penn athletics in a way nobody else does.

The DP's editorial page sparkles campus debate every day. And our award-winning weekly arts and entertainment magazine, 34th Street, offers readers its offbeat perspective on life, in-depth feature stories on the city and movie/record/theatre/book reviews.

Many of our writers had never written for a newspaper before they reviewed the DP. Now they interview everyone from mayors to University administrators to homeless people to rock singers to presidential candidates.

PHOTOGRAPHY

Lenses, cameras and flash equipment in hand, our photographers go where the action is. In recent months, the pages of the DP have featured photographs of Philadelphia Mayor Wilson Goode, hands raised in victory following his successful re-election bid; the Penn men's basketball team cutting down the net after winning the Ivy League championship; students protesting the visit of Minister Louis Farrakhan; and campus speakers Jean Kirkpatrick, Sandra Day O'Connor, George Bush, Michael Dukakis, John Updike, Andrew Young and Joe Jackson.

We'll help you develop the skills needed to shoot, develop and print your photographs. Whether you're interested in photography as an art or as a journalistic skill, the DP has what you're looking for: the best darkroom on campus, up-to-date photography equipment, and a wide range of assignments.

ART

DP artists work nightly with editors on special page designs, graphics, and illustrations. Now you can have your drawings published instead of just showing them to your friends.

Our art staff utilizes the latest state-of-the-art equipment — such as Macintosh computers, laser printers, and digital typesetters — to get the job done.

And if you're interested in entering the advertising or graphic design fields, the DP is the best place to learn.

BUSINESS

The DP means business too. We're not just a campus newspaper — we're an independent corporation in which students call the shots.

At the DP, you won't learn about the business world by reading a textbook — you'll visit customers, develop budgets, plan marketing strategies, work with computers, formulate financial statements, and design advertisements. And you'll gain the kind of real-life business experience employers love.

The DP offers a variety of departments in which to get involved — so whether you're a person person, a number cruncher or a design wiz, we've got a place for you.

SALES/MARKETING

After undergoing an in-depth training program, DP sales representatives hit the streets running. Their clients are a wide-ranging group, from the owner of the local drugstore to the advertising director of Veteran's Stadium. But whether the client has $100 or $10,000 to spend on advertising, our salespeople help the customer produce the most effective campaign for the money.

Local businesses depend on us to help them succeed in the competitive marketplace.

And DP representatives receive generous rewards: with commissions and bonuses, most earn several hundred dollars per month.

Our marketing department brainstorm for new ways to promote the paper to attract readers and advertisers. To increase community awareness, staffers conduct market research, design promotional materials, write advertising copy and cultivate new clients.

CREDIT/FINANCE

How does $750,000 sound? The DP is a big business — our advertising revenues total nearly three-quarters of a million dollars per year. You can study the theory of finance at Wharton, but the DP gives you real-world experience with actual real-life business laboratory — and the money is real. Finance and credit staff members control the money by preparing budgets and financial statements and by handling customer service, billing and collections. Few other activities on campus offer as much independence with such real stakes.

AD DESIGN AND PRODUCTION

Last year, a team of DP artists won first place in a national college newspaper contest for design of a promotional advertising campaign, and several other ads also won awards. More importantly, they helped local merchants increase their business.

Every day, art staffers work with the marketing and sales staffs to produce promotional materials and create exciting ads for clients.

Our production department provides the perfect outlet for your creative skills and imagination. Staffers translate storyboard layouts and type into finished ads, from design to typesetting to assembly in each day's paper.

Temple faculty ratify two-year contract

On Friday, the Temple faculty union overwhelmingly ratified a new, two-year contract last week, just in time to avoid a repeat of the labor strife which disrupted the 1986 school year for 19 days.

Approximately 82 percent of the 300 voting chapter members voted in favor of the contract, which covers two fiscal years and runs until 1990. The union stewards, however, were smaller—75 percent of the approximately 160 steward members.

Arthur Hochner, president of the Temple chapter of the American Association of University Professors-American Federation of Teachers, said that polls of the membership factors distinguished this year's negotiations from those of 1986. "We affiliated a year ago with the American Federation of Teachers, and they gave us a great deal of help in negotiation and the administration apparently didn't want us to strike, or at least couldn't afford a strike this year," Hochner said.

He added that the increase is average among other comparable universities, but the salaries are below the "ideal or fourth quartile, before the last two years. Two years ago, 100 Temple facul-

"A lot of people don't give me much of a chance there," he said. "But then again, nobody gave me much of a chance at Penn. I think I surprised some people, and that's a thrill." Novoselsky had to adjust to a new offensive system, but he made the transition and was pleased with his performance.

"The terminology was different; that was hard at first," he said, "but I picked up on it pretty quickly. You can't just learn plays from the playbook — you have to be out there on the field reacting to defenses and making split-second decisions. I was happy with my progress and the results. I thought I did well in pre-season. I didn't drop any balls..."

Former Quakers live out football dream

Novoselsky caught two passes for 10 yards in the exhibition game that preceded, but he could see the writing on the wall after the last game. "I didn't get much playing time against Dallas," he said. "I kind of knew it was coming."

Novoselsky credited the Bears in being professional when they released him, and they asked him to return to camp next year. But Novoselsky feels that he will now join the rest of his classmates and retire from competitive football. "I think this will probably be it for me. We're not going to be keeping our year after year. I'll be happy with the memories. All good things have to end. I've lived out my dream — now it's time to live out reality..."

NFL Suspends Dent, Rams' White

FBN — Charles White of the Los Angeles Rams, 30, who won the Heisman Trophy as a senior at Ohio State and a part of Chicago Bears, star defensive end Dick Butkus and running back Ollie Matson, were suspended by the league for 30 days yesterday for violating its substance abuse policy.

All three will have to complete an out-of-town treatment program before they become eligible to return to camp.

Two days after he was suspended, Dick Butkus's lawyer quoted the league's statement on Butkus's case.

"We are pleased to announce that Ollie Matson has been granted a conditional release and will be able to report to camp," the lawyer said. "He has been granted a conditional release and will be able to report to camp."
Glover aims to solve quarterback puzzle

BY JON WILSON

Junior Malcolm Glover (left), his thumb injury from last season fully healed, appears to be Penn's starting quarterback for 1988.

Glover, at 6-3 and 220 pounds, was named to the Atlantic Ten Conference All-Decade first team for the 1970s. He was a two-year starter for the Quakers, 1979-80, and was named to the 1980 College Football All-America Second Team by the Associated Press.

Glover was scheduled to major in economics, but the Quakers have allowed him to take a redshirt year due to his injury last year. He has an Atmospheric Science degree and is planning to major in Urban Affairs.

Glover has been working with offensive coordinator Mike Kaplan as well as with head coach Don Ritter.

Ritter said that he was pleased with Glover's performance in practice.

"Malcolm is a very good athlete," Ritter said. "He has a strong arm, good footwork, and is a good leader. He has improved a lot since last year, and I think he will be a great quarterback for us."
