Financial woes may force alumni magazine to cut one issue

By CRAIG LABOVITZ

A $200,000 shortfall may force The Penn- sylvanian's Alumni Magazine to cut one issue this year. Alumni subscribers have contributed approximately $5 million to the magazine over the past two years. This year's shortfall is due to an 80 percent decrease in donations from alumni. The magazine's editorial expenses are approximately $1 million per year. The magazine has been funded by alumni donations for the past 20 years. This year, however, the magazine will have to rely on other sources of revenue to cover its costs. According to the Alumni Magazine, the shortfall is due to a decrease in donations from alumni. The magazine is also facing increased costs due to inflation. The magazine's editorial staff is currently working on a new initiative to increase revenue. The new initiative includes a subscription drive, a digital subscription service, and a new advertising program. The magazine's editorial staff is also seeking new ways to engage with its audience. Council to discuss escort service

Security committee proposes general expansion of escort service

In a report slated for discussion at today's University Council meeting, the Safety and Security Committee proposes an expansion of the escort service, including a proposal to extend the service to students in other parts of campus.

The committee, which recommends the new expansion of the escort service, was prompted by a resolution submitted to the Student Council by the Graduate and Professional Students Organization (GAPSA) on January 8. The group called for the trial extension to begin before the first of February.

Instead of bringing the resolution to the floor, the Steering Committee asked the public to participate in a debate on the merits of the proposal. The debate will be held on the University of Pennsylvania campus on Thursday, February 11, at 7 p.m. at the University Center.

A Legal Mess

As impossible as it may sound, the country's nine most powerful judges have refused to adjudicate the massive sexual harassment case facing colleges and universities today.

Last week, the Supreme Court declined to rule on the legality of releasing confidential peer reviews to tort plaintiffs. Plaintiffs and defendants across the country anxiously awaited a precedent-setting decision that would have ended years of conflicting rulings issued from various courts.

Formerly, when a professor at a public university made a sexual harassment claim, the professor was denied in 1984 until the college in question had sought to dismiss a particular case. It began an investigation into her case.

The administration decided to withhold the documents and pre-emptively sued in a federal court, where it expected favorable ruling. The REPs reached a settlement with a suit in Philadelphia, where similar cases had resulted in losses.

After losing the first rounds in Philadelphia, the Supreme Court presented the conflict to the Supreme Court.

Unfortunately, the justices refused to rule on only the technical issue of which court should render an enforceable decision. As a result, the Tung controversy will only add to the morass of diverging federal court opinions.

There needs to be a careful balance when deciding confidentiality in peer reviews and charges of race and sexist hiring practices. The Supreme Court must establish this balance, but its ruling, in effect, is a non-decision. The question of releasing confidential peer reviews will still be decided on a case-by-case basis.

But the Supreme Court justice paid to join national senator when other courts disagree. Perhaps, someone should dock their pay.

Two U. students injured in bar brawls

By ELIZABETH LEYI

University students were injured at local bars twice during the past month in unrelated incidents which both witnesses cited were unprovoked.

Early Monday morning, two campus football players assaulted both the chairman of Students for Racial Education and agents of the Pennsylvania State Police in Smoky Joe's Bar, according to witnesses and a Public Safety report.

Following the incident, Philadelphia Police took Berger to the Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania emergency room for X-rays and an examination of his head.

Wharton senior James Line, who observed it from a distance, termed the incident a "trifle."

"Some guy jumped into it," Berger said. "We're football players and so we were a bit sorely because it was a first day back and we thought he had a right to be approved."

Bach of the students said that after purchasing a pitcher of beer, they were told to leave by a man in the establishment who was a bouncer. The students said that bar employees chased them to 38th Street as they left the bar.

"They were telling us to leave," Line said. "I just remember someone yelling: 'You're not going to have any more: that's for sure.'"

Zeta Beta Tau, which was suspended last month after fraternity members interacted with female wrappers at a rock concert, is preparing to reinstate the fraternity. The chapter has a petition for reinstatement that is in the process of being submitted.

"Ihope it's going to have any effect, that's for sure," he said. "It's the people that draw the crowds.

"Colby and Mark Fosset were walking from the bars and the next thing we knew they pushed him (Berger)," Line said.

"He had such a tight hold on him that his elbow was underneath both calves, and he was using his leg like it was a bat," Line said.

He continued that Fosset refused to let Berger go after he fell, Berger, who confirmed Fosset's entire account, saw the incident for several seconds.

Both Berger and Line said that the man's mannerisms, vituperations against the two football players, and his "walk in the dark" came after Berger confronted him about what he called the "titty" scene, another student was involved in the incident, but was not observed from a distance.

I just remember someone yelling: 'Colby, the student clearly worst injured in the attack, said and told what he had just seen of the incident.

"It was just an attack. It was just a lot of drinks in me."

Mark Wright, the owner of Backstreet Cafe, denied knowledge of this attack. When pressed, he added that the students "bumped into us," but he believed that the attack was unprovoked.

"I don't think anything of it."

Both Berger and Line stressed the incident a "trifle."

Afterwards, that he was not involved in the incident, but instead observed it from a distance.

"I just remember someone yelling: 'Colby, you're not going to have any more: that's for sure,'" he said. "I just remember someone yelling: 'You're not going to have any more: that's for sure,'"

Ingen, who was sharply against the fraternity suspension, said last year that she supposed the fraternity suspension was the result of "an internal exploitation of women,"

He said that the chapter expects a high turnout for rush, which begins this Friday and ends the first week of February.

"We're not going to have any more: that's for sure," he said. "It's the people that draw the crowds.

Polish leader urges Soviet recognition of obtains of Solidarity

WARSAW, Poland — Prime Minister Moscow's visit to Warsaw today was a significant step forward in the strained relationship between Poland and the Soviet Union. The visit was characterized by an atmosphere of cooperation and understanding, with both leaders expressing their commitment to furthering the dialogue between their nations.

The meeting took place at the Presidential Palace, where the two leaders engaged in a series of discussions that covered a range of topics, including economic cooperation, cultural exchanges, and regional stability. Both leaders reiterated their support for the principles enshrined in the Helsinki Accords, which aim to foster peace and security in Eastern Europe.

The visit was widely viewed as a positive development, offering hope for a more stable and cooperative relationship between Poland and the Soviet Union. It was seen as a sign of the growing importance of dialogue and diplomacy in resolving the many challenges that continue to beset the region.

The implications of the visit were expected to be far-reaching, affecting not only bilateral relations but also broader efforts to promote peace and stability in Europe. The leaders' commitment to ongoing dialogue was seen as a crucial step towards achieving these goals.

Meese violated ethics codes, report says

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department announced today that Attorney General Edwin Meese III is being investigated for possible ethics violations.

Meese is under scrutiny for a series of actions that could violate federal ethics guidelines. The investigation was prompted by allegations that Meese violated federal ethics codes, which prohibit the solicitation or acceptance of gifts or favors in return for official action.

The probe, led by the Justice Department's Office of Professional Responsibility, has raised questions about Meese's behavior and potential conflicts of interest. It has also sparked concern about the integrity of the administration and the rule of law.

The investigation is expected to continue for several months, and it is unclear how long it will take to conclude. However, the Justice Department has committed to thoroughly investigating the allegations and ensuring that any violations are appropriately addressed.

King III reflects on ideals

In the above world, how the president did not fight for ideals was not his fight, but one for which the president did not have a grasp on many important issues facing the nation. King claimed that there were so many problems in this country.

"The people who do not remember their history are doomed to repeat the mistakes of the past," he warned. "It's important to understand where you come from," he said. "But you can never go back. You have to have a long way to go.

According to King, 40 million people in the U.S., live below the poverty level, one to five million are homeless, and an alarming number of children live in poverty. He voiced the need for people of all nationalities to stand together in order to solve the problem.

"If you're in America, you're going to have to learn to deal with one another," King said. He also stated that the "I-am" of certain times, an attitude that puts self-aggrandizement above all else. "In 1964 we gained the right to vote through blood, sweat, and tears, and now... we did not use it as we should have," he criticized.

"Breaking upon the mindset to continue being American, King called for change through such non-violent tactics as writing and self-assertion. "Martin Luther King also understood and felt that if we did not learn to examine one day we might have to face non-existence," King said.

The Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority, the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity, and the University sponsored the speech. "It's always good to hear someone else tell you a different idea," King's dream," she said. "It helps to reinforce your efforts. It helps each of us do what we should do."

SAS’ Berg shifted to new administrative post

By LAUREN MEAD

School of Arts and Sciences Associate Undergraduate Dean Ivar Berg left his last month to assume another associate deanship which he termed “a new challenge” in the SAS administration. Sonnenstein named Norman Adler, founder of the Biological Science Div, to replace Berg last month. Adler officially took over Berg’s job on Monday.

Berg will become the Associate Dean for the Social Sciences, a post which has been vacant since Provost Michael Aiken left the SAS deanship in 1987. When Berg had performed the role, he had been associated with the SAS division while heading the school.

Berg did not further specify the reasons behind his departure as the associate dean of the SAS administration. Adler said “we are very energetic and there’s a lot of things we want to do and he needs the staff to do it.”

Adler added that he wants to “wield the whole college” — including resources to improve SAS depart-ments and institutes. “I am determined to make this the building undergraduate experience in the country,” the new associate dean said.

Adler also said that he wants to work on increasing minority recruit-ment and implement a freshman writing requirement. He explained that he wants to form a student com-mittee addressing complaints about the current distribution requirements. “I’d like a person with a mission,” Adler said. “We want this kind of breadth and ex-panse. It’s full of good ideas”

Adler, a Lindback teaching award recipi-ent, will maintain his research lab and continue to teach, recruiting his own staff and with his science degree, as he has in his previous post, in the Logan Hall office.

Sonnenstein announced the switch is a permanent but has said he is considering the SAS faculty. The dean, who came to the University in September, described Berg’s move as a joint decision designed to fill a va-cant position and stabilize Ins department. He added that it is normal procedure for the dean to appoint division heads without a search committee.

Sonnenstein said yesterday that before appointing Adler — who has no previous experience as a dean — he consulted many faculty members. He added that it is normal procedure for the dean to appoint division heads without a search committee. Sonnenstein praised Berg’s accomplishments and said that Berg changed jobs because both side — “It was time to move on.”

Dean Berg is a very distinguished person, forward to the advice he will give on the social sciences side,” the dean said.

In his new post, Berg will supervise curriculum and faculty decisions in the school’s social sciences depart-ments. In his previous post, he headed the undergraduate division of SAS, including college research and the out-

Smith sports rare feathers for Hawks

Freshman guard John Petitt sprints the St. Joe's defense for two of his game-high 17 points. Smith scored a career-high 21 points against DePaul on Thursday.

"It was a very good night for me," Smith said. "The problem was that we weren't getting a lot of looks at the basket. But once I got on a roll, the crowd started cheering for me and that helped me get to the line. I was able to make some shots and that gave me confidence to keep shooting."

A fifth-year senior, Smith has had more responsibility on the court this year due to injuries to senior forward Brian Leahy and junior Rich Overholser.

"He's been doing an incredible job," said head coach John Carroll. "It's a great accomplishment for him and we're proud of him."

Smith's performance helped Penn claim its first two-game winning streak of the season.

Penn's two-mile relay quartet finished fourth, as did the 4x400-meter relay. In the mile relay, the Quakers finished fourth, behind St. Joe's, Boston College and Princeton.

"We're very nervous going into this," said head coach David Baratz. "But we have a lot of experience and we're confident that we can do well."

Penn women's basketball team, after a difficult loss to Temple, 2-1, was able to gain a signature win against La Salle, expecting to give Temple a rough battle last Wednesday at 7 p.m.

Instead, the Quakers were treated, 80-53. For all intents and purposes, the game was over 10 minutes into the first half.

One of my comments before the game was that Temple is the kind of team you can fall back on. Penn head coach Marianne Stanley echoed this thought.

"I think that (Temple) is not the kind of team you can fall back on," Stanley said. "I think that they can't get it (the lead) together effectively in the first half but try to get in their gameplay and balance them mentally. They seem very intense out here."

The Lady Owls, who usually play primarily man-to-man defense, played a matchup for most of the game.

"They really run a match-up game pretty well," MacDonald said. "Their intensity is outstanding. We just can't let them do that to us."

The bottom line. Penn maintained, was that it was the seniors who made the game. The seniors had one of our goals but we didn't accomplish that," Stanndard said. "She's a real streak shooter. She can come out in the beginning of the game and hit her first four shots but she's so confident in herself that she wasn't tentative to shoot. And when they start falling, they come in bunches."
