Abolish the UA; Rebuild Student Government

The Undergraduate Assembly is beyond repair. It would make little difference if the Interfrat-er-ity Council were able to remove a takeover of the judg-ing student government, or if there were a sudden in-crease in interest during this week's U.A. elections. The undergraduates of this university do not and should not respect a political body whose intentions are in ques-tion. The UA has squandered its authority and responsi-bility to the Student Activities Council and the Nominations and Elections Committee. In this quest for a balance of power, the UA surrendered the most important tools needed to represent effectively. The UA is no longer a viable medium for political change and discourse on this campus. It is also an embarrass-ment to all undergraduates who attend our try-Lee university. The average student probably knows little, if anything, about the UA. And even if they do, they show no indication that they care. As Senator Phaahla charges, sanctions allegedly pre-planned were not mere accidents of the past. The chairmen took advantage of the student's inexperience and confused the matter. If the officer called in Phaahla to testify, the statement that he had no evidence to show that the UA had not been a victim of the Attack on the Selective Draft.

Richmond under police protection after second set of threats

According to Richardson, his office has not received any threats since last week, when two students were threatened with death by telephone.

Two students were interviewed by the police after the incident.

"I have no idea who is responsible," Richardson said. "It's possible that someone is just trying to stir up trouble."

However, one student who was present at the time of the incident said that an anonymous caller had threatened to kill him.

The caller said, "You're next."

Another student said that he had heard similar threats in the past, but was unsure if they were related.

"I don't think it's anything serious," he said. "It could just be some kids having fun."

Richardson was interviewed twice in answering the incident, and said that he was confident that the situation was under control.

"I believe that the police are taking this seriously," he said. "They are investigating it, and we will keep you updated."
Calif. Vet prof suing school over classroom use of live dogs

By DAN SWARTZ

The University of California, Davis, has agreed to pay a veteran professor $1.2 million to settle a lawsuit over the alleged misuse of dogs in the school's veterinary research laboratories.

The settlement, announced this week, marks the end of a long legal battle between the professor, Nedim Buyukmihci, and the university, which had been accused of violating his rights by using dogs in research without his consent.

Buyukmihci, a professor in the university's College of Veterinary Medicine, had filed the lawsuit in 2016 after discovering that dogs had been used in experiments conducted by other professors without his knowledge.

The settlement includes a provision that the university will establish a new policy to ensure that all animal experiments are approved by a committee of animal care experts before proceeding.

The university also agreed to pay Buyukmihci's legal fees and expenses, which are estimated to be around $500,000.

Buyukmihci, who has been a professor at UC Davis since 1986, said he was pleased with the outcome of the lawsuit.

"This is a victory for animals," he said. "It's a victory for the principles of animal welfare and scientific integrity."

EDITORIAL: Abolish The UA

As an individual who enjoys studying historical human behavior, I find the White Student Union to be quite fascinating. It is not personal courage, but the inherent truth contained within the act of acknowledging the past that is truly frightening. Why does this group, with such a solid foundation of history and culture, persist in the 21st century? Much has been written about the White Student Union, its origins, its activities, and its impact. However, the question of whether it should be abolished or not is not a new one. Many people have debated this issue, but the consensus seems to be divided.

Some argue that the White Student Union serves an important purpose by promoting awareness of the unique experiences and challenges faced by white students on campus. They believe that by creating a space for white students to come together, the union can foster a sense of community and support. Furthermore, they argue that by addressing issues specifically related to white students, the union can help bridge gaps and promote understanding between different racial groups.

Others, however, see the union as perpetuating a sense of entitlement and privilege among white students. They argue that by giving white students a platform to voice their concerns, the union reinforces the idea that white students have unique needs and challenges that require special attention. This can lead to a further division and perpetuation of the “us vs. them” mentality.

Regardless of one's stance on the issue, it is clear that the White Student Union has been a controversial and divisive group on campus for many years. As universities continue to grapple with issues of race and diversity, it is essential to consider the long-term impact of such organizations and whether they serve a constructive purpose.

Bloom County/Berke Breathed

In conclusion, I feel that the UA should be abolished.

Card warders are the worst. I am among these students who believe that the UA should be abolished. The various clubs and organizations that exist on campus, such as the Whitman Center, the Alumni Association, and the University Democrats, can in some cases perform the same functions as the UA. The UA has no true purpose, and it is a relic of a past era that has long passed.

The biggest accomplishment of the UA was the establishment of the Student Affairs role in 1969. Since that time, the focus of the UA has been on promoting student involvement and providing a platform for student voices. However, the organization has not lived up to its potential and has become more of an obstacle than a support system.

The only project that I worked on with the UA was the creation of a database of card warders on campus. This was a necessary step to improve student safety and security. However, the UA has failed to fulfill its promise, and it is time for the university to take a stand against this outdated organization.

So, in conclusion, I feel that the UA should be abolished. It is time for the university to move forward and create a more inclusive and welcoming environment for all students. We cannot afford to hold on to the past when there are more urgent issues to address. The UA has no true purpose, and it is a relic of a past era that has long passed.

Penn beats Oxford-Cambridge team, 10-9

By HOWARD ZAKOWITZ
For over a century, the men's track teams of Oxford College and Cambridge University have crossed the Atlantic Ocean to compete against each other. Last weekend, the teams met for the first time in the United States, as they faced off during the Penn Relays. The Quakers dominated the meet, winning 10-9 against Oxford. It was a dominant performance, as the Quakers set new standards in the 4x400 relay and the mile, and broke records in the triple jump and the javelin.

Princeton sends shivers through W. Track, 88-57
By JENNIFER WILLIAMSON
Eleven days ago, the sun was shining, and Penn's women's track team had an incredible meet to open their outdoor season at Franklin Field. Last Saturday in the temperature dropped to a chilly 4 degrees. The Quakers were still dominant, as they defeated Princeton, 88-57. It was a triumphant return to the Western Track after the disappointing finish three years ago.

Penn finishes fourth in team competition
By ALEC SCHWERT
When only seventeen seconds remain on the clock, the person with the best score usually wins. But the boisterous noise makes it difficult to determine a winner. This was the case when the Quakers faced the University of Pennsylvania's fencing team. The Quakers had to rely on their aggressive and fast-paced style to win the match. In the end, they placed fourth, but they were inches away from a podium finish.

On the afternoon of December 10th, 1988, the Temple Lady Owls' track team headed south to a rather unlikely venue - a basketball arena. Convention Hall in Atlantic City, N.J., is not used every day to host the track team, but it was the perfect setting for the Temple Owls to prove their abilities in the weightlifting competition.

Third-inning comeback keys 5-2 win

By GLEN DICKSON
VILLANOVA, Pa. — The Penn softball team punched their ticket to the postseason with a hard-fought victory over Villanova. The Quakers' offense was led by the bat of second baseman Sam Cosenza, who knocked in two runs and scored twice. The final score was 5-2, with Penn emerging victorious.
