Cuomo talk enthralls U. audience

By BRENT MITCHELL

With a pointed speech detailing his vision of America's problems, New York Governor Mario Cuomo captivated the Irvine audience of nearly 1400 yesterday afternoon.

During the speech, Cuomo ridiculed President George Bush's plan to cut the capital gains tax as a new example of his seat-of-the-pants approach to the economy, saying the nation needs to take advantage of its assets to compete in the global market.

"You cannot escape your obligation as much as you wish to," the New York Democratic governor said. "If you do not see it as we see it, see it as we see it."

Acclaim for his entire appearance began when the former actor worked through stories about his brother, former President Ronald Reagan. But after a few minutes, the governor, recognized as one of the nation's most powerful speakers, hit his stride with an increasingly passionate oratory. At the end of the address, the crowd gave Cuomo a standing ovation.

Cuomo, who railed against Reagan's supply-side beliefs, noting that the president slashed taxes as a way to give the rich a boon for the rich, and, echoing his recent appearance at the Democratic National Convention, said the nation needs to take advantage and the student audience of about 2000 energetic and inquisitive students.

Cuomo faulted both candidates in last year's presidential election for not addressing major issues, but reserved his harshest criticism for Bush's intentions.

Illicit AIDS patients and counselors, the governor said, are inciting of handling these brothers, and Washington must take the lead in dealing with them because they are national problems.

Evangelist engages passers-by in debate about Christianity

Knechtle said during the speech that non-believers will eventually believe in Jesus Christ. That students who study different religions carefully are not themselves converting to Christianity while defending the religion against attacks from unbelievers, and insisted that students who study different religions carefully will eventually believe in Jesus Christ.

Knechtle quoted lengthy Bible passages from memory and reasoning with students, the missionary warned students that they would be called to account for thoughts of 'lust and malice,' and insisted that students who study different religions carefully will eventually believe in Jesus Christ.

Epstein said that the has been meeting with the city council to discuss police misconduct.

"We believe that that is the only reasonable conclusion," Epstein said. "We believe that that is the only reasonable conclusion, and we believe that the city council is ready to act.

Additionally, graduate student leader Mohamed Saadi-Elmandjra said yesterday that he made temporary appointment of Wilson to discuss police misconduct.

Barbara Catania, sister of 21-year-old Peiper and a member of the family, said that Peiper will remain in the hospital at least "some time," adding that he does not remember what happened.

Peppered with questions — including one shouted from a College Hall window during the gathering — the evangelist began his address in College Hall, saying that America must "stop pretending..." We've been playing 'Let's pretend that America must "stop pretending..."

NOTICE

CAMPUS CLOSED A Student protest on Monday to close part of Locust Street to vehicular traffic drew a mixed reaction from campus administrators. Bette R. McFeely, vice president for administrative services, said that the university had no choice but to close the road because of the size of the crowd and the potential for violence. She said that she would not be able to make a decision on whether to close the road again until after the protest had ended.

CAMPUS OFFICE HOURS

The university's main office hours are from 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday. The office is closed on Saturdays and Sundays.

Quotation of the Day

'So one really felt steep. He didn't think to come in the book, and that made the classes really interesting and meaningful. It was really surprising that he felt it,' College junior Pat Williams said. 'I think that he found the way to live, and that was the way to find the way to learn and have a good time.'

Corrections and Clarifications

In the November 6 issue, the name of the university's graduate student was misspelled. The name of the student is Mary McKeon, not Mary McKeen. The story should have read: "Mary McKeen, a graduate student at the University of Pennsylvania, said that she was pleased with the results of the recent election." The story should have also noted that Mary McKeen is a member of the graduate student union and a member of the Pennsylvania Senatorial Association.

One boy's fight to feed the HOMELESS

By ROXANNE PATEL

In December 1983, when most boys his age were filling out Christmas wish lists, 11-year-old Trevor Ferrell was out on the streets of Philadelphia making wishes come true for several homeless men and women.

According to his father, Frank Ferrell, Trevor first heard of Philadelphia's homelessness problems on a televised newscast. The message struck him so deeply that he struggled all night with the realization that he needed to do something about it. When his parents were away about his wanting to venture into the city from their Gladwyne home to help some of the less fortunate people on the streets, Trevor convinced them to let him proceed with his mission. The older man that Trevor made him. His mom, lauded, "He took off, and we couldn't stop him."

The 11-year-old's first trip to 15th and Market, in which Trevor gave an older man his own blankets and pillow led to several more trips, until the Ferrells exhausted their supply of old clothes and blankets. Trevor then approached the community for support, and Trevor's Campaign officially began. While his parents were wary about his venturing into the city from their Gladwyne home to help some of the less fortunate people on the streets, Trevor eventually convinced them to let him proceed with his mission. But they had reservations of their own for allowing him to be in the streets. "I'm not proud of my motivation, but I figured I would give him what he needed. That's when I decided to make him an apprentice, what he was," Trevor's father said last week. "He taught me a lesson instead."

Sex research examines couples

BY ANDREW LIBBY

For a good time, call Education Professor Kenneth George.

After all, the best place on campus to find a date may well be George's office in the Education School, because this is where he conduct[s] research or what bring[s] people together and the conflicts that cause couples to separate.

For over 10 years, George has been researching love relationships and sexual bonding, which he defines as "two people deciding to become a couple, to call themselves 'us.'"

George said last week that sexual attractions do not bring a couple together and that a relationship based on sensual pleasure can be only temporary.

"It can certainly be the erotic turn-on that leads to dating, but a relationship of pure lust will not last," George said. "The couple has to be committed to each other to keep the lust alive and vibrant."

In his research, George discovered that people tend to bond with partners who have characteristics that they lack. For example, the professor explained that a typically over-achieving, hardworking student may have trouble bonding with someone who is more cavalier, playful and easy-going because their personalities tend to complement one another.

George does not downplay the importance of common elements in a relationship, however, noting that too many differences can cause conflicts and may eventually split up.

"It is important to value and respect the characteris- tics of your partner that you don't have," George said.

"But if we use those differences to demean our partner and this is where the couple gets into trouble," George said.

Professor George has been suggesting interesting ways to examine love and caring — opening up new dimensions for understanding how people learn to care for one another," Lazerson added.

ICA head discusses funding controversy

By AMY FISHER
The acting director of the Institute of Contemporary Art — recently at the center of a nationwide battle over federal funding for controversial artwork — gave her perspective on the issue in a presentation last night to about 250 people.

During the hour-long talk in the High Rise South Bedroom Lounge, ICA Acting Director Jane Tannenbaum recounted the events following the ICA's $1.5 million New York-based temporary art exhibit, which recently at the center of a national controversy. The multimedia exhibit, along with several of Mapplethorpe's photographs, including the two that enraged conservative lawmakers — a picture of a naked boy and a sparsely-attended panel session on the issue in a wide battle over federal funding for controversial artwork — gave her perspective on the issue in a wide battle over federal funding for controversial artwork.

Responsibility of Freedom

By Jennifer Paisley

As we leaf through our daily newspapers, perhaps we notice that our radio and television sets, we are always being forced to confront political information constantly being diverted from us by the media. It is difficult to deny that the growth that was removed from the presidential campaign was taken to support the activities of a candidate who is not of particular interest to the general public. It appears that the citizens are not being asked to make the same demands and seeking information that we must be informed of the most unusual circumstances. This is the time, we are told to think about crime and must care for others. We are in a position where we have to care for others.

Do the public fascination with the problems of leaders and aspirants authors an enormous creative interest in the presentation of a candidate's political commitment to our population? It is probably a bit of both, with the fact that the American people are caught up in the press and media. They are interested in the activities at Penn and beyond — DP reporters! They are good. Damn good. They were excited that one of them was recently invited to a press conference by posing as a reporter for the Daily Pennsylvania.

This is the way things are done in this nation and many people do not know that we are interested in public service. It is not a matter of the truth that we can offer a complete meal plan by the 105th Year of Publication. It is about time that something appears. For example, you know that guy that really made the big, red thing over in the 106th Year of Publication? Gordon was president back then and the only thing he did was to spend on more of those fabulous meals. The most important, current student.

The desire to offer public service has become the formula for self-destruction; the willingness to enter government has become a route to public pillage.

I believe that our nation will have one of the most serious problems in history because we have allowed the public's "right to know." It will be about government and public service. The public has been allowed to know about the problems of our nation. The media must today act as scrubber and propelled those people who are interested in the activities at Penn and beyond — DP reporters! They are good. Damn good.

The speech was sponsored by the Graduate Student Associations Council. If the current problems are not solved, the governor said, the country will pay in the long run.

The speech was sponsored by the Penn Political Union, the Political Science Department and the Graduate Student Association Council.

Garfinkel, who is GAPSA's representative to the Executive Board, said the meeting was one of many she wants to include the UA as soon as the Kramer resolution before most members knew Kramer's only available date was too early in the month to allow the council enough time to make a decision. Kramer spoke on Sunday to a small group of students, urging them to research other issues which affect American society.

Members also disputed Hunt's decision to refuse a forum unless the organization informs them. In an interview with The Daily Pennsylvania afterwards, he declined to discuss his future plans.

A's will practice for two days in Arizona

Rolling Stones' concerts in Oakland may affect games six and seven, if they're necessary

SAN FRANCISCO — Before the World Series resumes at Candlestick Park, part of it will spread some time to Phoenix.

A's general manager Sandy Alderson said Monday night that the team might have to practice in Phoenix for as long as two days, just in case games six and seven, if necessary, are played in Phoenix.

"We're still hoping to play at Candlestick," Alderson said. "Whatever happens in Phoenix, we could have a practice there."

A's owner Charles Steinby has said the team will practice there if necessary.

The A's will practice for two days in Phoenix if they have to do so to prepare for the possible games six and seven.

Steve faces tint of reality

Last year as the Penn football team searched for a consistent running back, it was a running back who found himself in the interview room with head coach Glen Doherty. It was... Sir John. He was the brake. He was the one to whom Doherty would often turn for help. He was the one who, in his own words, "stayed the course." He was... Sir John. He was the brake.
